Bot.: A genus of plants belonging to the order Pittosporaceæ (Pittosporads). The English name of the genus is APPLE-BERRY (q. v.).

billed, a. [BILL.] Having a bill. Generally in composition, as short-billed, tooth-billed, &c.

bil'-lērs, bil'-lūre, bil'-dērs, s. [Etym. doubtful. Probably bilders is the oldest form.] A plant not yet properly identified. It is called also bell-ragges (q. v.). T. Cooper (ed. of Elyots, A. D. 1559) says that some name it Yellow Watercress. The name Bilders is still applied to Helosciadium nodiflorum, which, however, is white instead of yellow. (Britten and Holland.)

bil'-lēt (1), byl'-et, s. [In Sw. biljett; Dut. biljet; Sp. bolella; Port. bilhete; Ital. bulletta; Dan., Ger., & Fr. billet, dimin. of O. & Norm. Fr. bill.] [BILL, BULLET.]

A. Ordinary Language:

1. A small paper, a note.

"This billet was intercepted in its way to the post, and sent up to Whitehall."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxii.

2. A ticket, directing soldiers at what house they are to lodge; also the soldiers' quarters in the house.

¶ In the proverb "Every bullet has its billet," the sense of billet=appointed end and destination, probably comes from A. 2.

B. Heraldry:

1. A small oblong figure, generally supposed to represent a sheet of paper folded in the form of a letter. Its proportion is two squares. (Gloss. of Her.)

2. A staff as a billet, raguled and tricked, meaning a ragged staff in pale. (Gloss. of Her.) billet-doux, s. [Fr.; from billet, and doux=sweet . . . soft.] Love-letter.

¶ In the subjoined examples observe the different words with which Pope makes billet-doux rhyme in the singular and in the plural.

"'Twas then, Belinda, if report say true, Thy eyes first open'd on a billet-doux."

Pope: Rape of the Lock, i. 117-18.

"Here files of pins extend their shining rows, Puffs, powders, patches, Bibles, billet-doux."

Ibid., 137-8.

billet-note, s. A folded writing paper six by eight inches.

bil'-lēt, byl'-et, s. [From Fr. billette=a fagot of wood cut and dry for firing; billet=a block, a clog; Prov. bilho. Billot is dimin. of Fr. bill, . . . a piece of wood.]

A. Ordinary Language:

1. A small log or fagot of wood for firing.

"Their billet at the fire was found."—Prior.

2. A bar, or wedge, or ingot of gold, or anything similar.

B. Technically:

1. Arch. [BILLET-MOLDING.]

2. Saddlery:

- (1) A strap which enters a buckle.

- (2) A pocket or loop which receives the end of a buckled strap.

Naut.: A piece of wood at the bow of a whale-boat around which the harpoon-line runs; a logger-head.

billet-molding, s.

Arch.: An ornament used in string courses and the archivolt of windows and doors. It consists of cylindrical blocks with intervals, the blocks lying lengthwise on the cornice, sometimes in two rows, breaking joints. (Knight.)

Billet-molding.

From BILLET (1), v. (q. v.)]

I. Military:

1. To direct a soldier by a billet, nete, or ticket where he is to lodge.

"Retire thee; go where thou art billetted.
Away, I say."

Shakesp.: Othello, ii. 3.

2. To quarter soldiers upon householders or others.

"The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billetted upon them."—Clarendon.

II. Fig. (of people in general): To send to quarters or temporary residence in any place.

bil'-lēt-ēd, pa. par. & a. [BILLET, v.] billeted-cable, s.

Arch.: Cabled molding with cinctures.

bil'-lēt-ing, s. [BILLET, v.] The act or operation of directing a soldier where to lodge, or quartering him on a specified house.

billeting-roll, s. A set of rollers for reducing iron to shape, to merchantable bar.

bil'-lētŝ, s. pl. [Etym. doubtful.] One of the English names for the Coal-fish, Merlangus carbonarius.

bil'-lēt-tŷ, bil'-lēt-é, a. [Fr. billeté.]

Her.: Sémé of billets.

Billetty counterbilletty: Barry and paly, the divisions of the former being as wide again as those of the latter.

bil'-iard (pron. bil'-yard) (pl. bill'-iards, bal-liards), s. & a. [In Sw. biljard, biljardspel (s. pl.); Dan. billardspil (s. pl.); Dut. biljartspel (s. pl.); Ger. billard, billardspiel; Port. bilhard; Ital. bigliardo; Fr. billard=billiards; Burgundian billard=a cripple, because he walks with a crutch, also called billard. From Fr. bill=a piece of wood, which the billiard-cue is.] (Littre, &c.)

A. As substantive:

- *1. Sing. (of the form billiard): The same as plural BILLIARDS (q. v.).

"With aching heart, and discontented looks, Returns at noon to billiard or to books."

Cowper: Retirement.

2. Plur. (of the forms billiards, balliards): A game of skill, said to have been invented in 1371 by Henricque Devigne, a French artist, though claims have been put forth on behalf of Italy rather than France. It is played on a level and smooth rectangular table with ivory balls, which are driven by a tapering stick called the cue, according to the rules established for the particular game played. (For these games, and the terms used in describing them, see BRICOLE, CARAMBOLE, HAZARDS, POOL, PYRAMIDS, WINNING-GAME, LOSING-GAME, and FOUR-GAME.)

"With dice, with cards, with balliards farre unfit."

Spenser: Mother Hubbard's Tale.

"Let it alone; let's to billiards."—Shakesp.: Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 5.

B. As adjective (of the form billiard): Of or pertaining to billiards, or in any way connected with billiards.

billiard-ball, s. An ivory ball, to be pushed along in the game of billiards.

"Even nose, and cheek withal Smooth as is the billiard-ball."

Ben Jonson.

billiard-cloth, s. The fine green cloth covering a billiard-table.

billiard-cue, s. A cue or stick, diminishing gradually to a point of half an inch or less in diameter, with which billiard-balls are pushed along the table.

billiard-mace, s. A long straight stick with a head at the point, formerly used for playing billiards.

1. A person, generally a boy or young man, who marks the points and games at billiards.

2. A counting apparatus for automatically registering these.

billiard-stick, s. The stick, whether mace or cue, with which billiards are played.

"When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard-stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion."—Locke.

billiard-table, s. An oblong table on which billiards are played. In European countries, until a very recent date it was generally about twelve feet long and six feet wide, covered with fine green cloth, surrounded with cushions, and containing six holes or "pockets." In America, the standard billiard tables are smaller, have no pockets, and the game has become a much more scientific performance, depending for its successful issue solely upon the players' knowledge of the laws of reflected motion and angles of incidence and reflection. The legitimate game is what is termed the 14-inch balk-line game.

"Some are forced to bound or fly upward, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard-table."—Boyle.

¶ Other obvious compounds with the basic word billiard: Billiard-room, billiard-player, &c.

bil'-līng, pr. par., a., & s. [BILL, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & participial adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove."

Dryden.

C. As substantive:

1. The act of joining bills as doves do in token of affection.

2. The act of caressing or fondling.

"I never much valued your billings and cooings."—Leigh Hunt.

Bil'-līngs-gāte, Bil'-īngs-gate, s. & a. [Said to have been so called from Belinus Magnus, a somewhat mythic British prince, father of King Lud, about B. C. 400. More probably from some unknown person called Billing.]

A. As substantive:

1. Topog. & Ord. Lang.: The celebrated London fish-market existent at least as early as A. D. 979, made a free market in 1699, extended in 1849, rebuilt in 1852, and finally exposed to the rivalry of another market begun 1874, completed 1876. (Haydn: Dict. Dates.)

2. Foul abusive language, such as is popularly supposed to be mutually employed by fish-wives who are unable to come to an amicable understanding as to the proper price of the fish about which they are negotiating. Billingsgate is used as a synonym of coarse, vulgar abuse.

(a) In a quarrel about fish.

"Much billingsgate was exchanged between the boats [of the trawlers and those who objected to trawling], but there was no actual violence."—Scotsman.

(b) Fish not being the subject of contention.

"Let Bawdry, Billingsgate, my daughters dear, Support his front, and oaths bring up the rear."

Pope: Dunciad, i. 307-8.

B. As adjective: Characteristic of Billingsgate.

" . . . but that Rome, Venice, Paris, and all very large cities have their Billingsgate language."—Fuller: Worthies, pt. ii, p. 197.

"After a great deal of Billingsgatry against poets."—Remarks upon Remarques (1673), p. 56. (J. H. in Boucher.)

bil'-lŷn, s. [In Dut. biljoen; Ger. & Fr. billion; Port. bilhao. From Lat. prefix bi=two, and (mi)llion. Trillion is on the same model.] In English notation a million times a million, and in England it is written 1,000,000,000,000, i. e., with twice as many ciphers as a million has. In this country and in France the notation is different, the word billion signifying only one thousand million, written 1000,000,000.

bil'-līt, a. [From A. S. bil, bill=any instrument or weapon made of steel.] Shod with iron. (Rudd.) (Scotch.)

"With the wele stetit and braid billit ax."

Douglas: Virgil, 388, l. (Jamieson.)

bill'-man, bil'-man, s. [Eng. bill (1); and man.] A man furnished with, or armed with, or who is in the habit of using, a "bill."

"Advancing from the wood are seen,
To back and guard the archer band
Lord Dacre's billmen were at hand."

Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, iv. 14.

bil'-lŷn, s. [Fr. billon=(1) copper coin, (2) debased coin.]

Numis.: A German coin-alloy of copper and silver, the former predominating.

bil'-lŷt, s. [Fr. billot=(1) a block, (2) a clog; Prov. bilho.] [BILLET.] Gold or silver in the bar or mass.

bil'-lŷw, bil'-lŷwe, s. [In Icel. bylgja; Sw. bölja; Dan. bølge; Low Ger. bulge; (M. H.) Ger. bulge. Cognate with Eng. bulge (q. v.).] A great swelling or crested wave of the sea or large lake, or less accurately of a river.

"Are vain as billows in a tossing sea."

Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. ii.

billow-beaten, a. [Eng. (1) billow, and (2) beaten.] Beaten by the billows. (Lit. & fig.)

" . . . the billow-beaten fate Of towering statists."

Jordan: Divinity and Morality in Poetry, 3, b.

bil'-lŷw, v. i. [From billow, s. (q. v.).] To swell into surges; to surge; to become hollow and crested. (Johnson.)

†bil'-lŷwed, a. [Eng. billow; -ed.] Swelled like a billow.

bil'-lŷw-īng, pr. par. & a. [BILLOW.]

"The billowing snow, . . ."—Prior

bil'-lŷw-ŷ, bil'-lŷw-ŷe, a. [Eng. billow; -y.]

1. Of the sea: Swelling into billows.

" . . . Pontus, the barren and billowy sea."—Grote: Hist. Greece, pt. i, ch. i.

2. Of foam: Tossed from the surface of billows.

"Descends the billowy foam, . . ."

Thomson: Seasons; Spring, 379.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāl, father, wē, wēt, hēre, camel, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whā, sōu; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trŷ, Sŷrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

3. Of the roar or murmur of the sea: Produced by the billows.

"But thou art swelling on, thou deep!
Through many an olden clime,
Thy billowy anthem ne'er to sleep
Until the close of time."

Hemans: The Sound of the Sea.

4. Of a grave: Among the billows.

"But just escaped from shipwreck's billowy grave, Trembles to hear its horrors named again."

Hemans: Sonnet, 80.

¶ The expression now common is a watery grave.

Bil'-lŷ (1), s. [Dimin. of Bill=William. Such a name might be expected to be given to a bird, as Robin Redbreast, Tom-tit, &c.]

billy-biter, s. A name for a bird, the Blue Tit (Parus caeruleus). [BLUE TIT.]

Hort.: The double-flowered variety of Saxifraga granulata.

¶ Other plants are also locally designated by the same name.

billy whitethroat, s. A name for a bird, the Garden Warbler or Pettychaps (Sylvia hortensis).

bil'-lŷ (2), s. [Etym. doubtful. Compare Fr. bille = . . . a packer's stick, . . . a rolling-pin.]

1. A policeman's baton.

2. Wool manufacture: A slubbing-machine in which the partially-compacted slivers of wool, in the condition of cardings or rolls, are joined end to end and receive a slight twist—the preliminary operation in wool-spinning. [SLUBBING-MACHINE.]

billygate, s.

Wool manufacture: The moving carriage in a slubbing-machine.

bil'-lŷ-cock, s. [Apparently from billy, dimin. of bill=William, &c.; cock, but why so called is not obvious.]

billycock hat, s. A vulgar term for the kind of felt hat technically called a deer-stalker. Another vulgar name for it is a pot-hat. It is stiff in texture, and not to be confounded with the soft felt hats technically named Kossuths, &c.

bil'-man, s. [BILLMAN.]

†bi'-lō'b-āte, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and Gr. lobos=(1) the lobe or lower part of the ear, (2) the lobe of the liver, (3) a legume. (LOBE.) In Fr. bilobé.] Two-lobed; partly, but not completely, divided into two segments. Bilobed is the more common word for the same thing.

bi'-lōbed, a. [From Lat. prefix bi, Gr. lobos (BILOBATE), and suff. -ed.] Bilobate (q. v.).

bi'-lōc, pa. par. [BILUKEN.] Surrounded.

"He biloc hem and smette among."

Story of Genesis and Exodus, 2,684.

bi'-lōc-u-lar, a. [In Fr. biloculaire. From Lat. prefix bi=two, and loculus=a little place; a coffin, a bier, also a compartment; a small receptacle with compartments; dimin. of locus=a place.]

Bot.: Having two cells or compartments. (Specially used of the interior of ovaries and ripe pericarps.)

bi'-lōc-u-lī'-nā, s. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and loculi.] [BILOCULAR.] D'Orbigny's name for a genus of Foraminifera.

bi'-lō-kēn (pa. par. beloked), v. t. [From A. S. gelocian=behold, see.] To look about. (Ormulum, 2,917.)

bi'-lōn'g, prep. [Eng. prefix bi, and long.] Alongside of.

"The reching wurth on God bilong."

Story of Genesis and Exodus, 2,058.

bi-loved, pa. par. or a. [The same as BELOVED (q. v.).] (Chaucer: C. T., 1,429.)

bi-lū'-kēn, pa. par. [A. S. belucan (pret. beleac, pa. par. belocen=to lock up, to inclose, to shut up.) Inclosed; shut up. [BELOCK, BILOC.]

"Al is biluken in Godes hand."

Story of Genesis and Exodus, 104.

bi-lūm'-pēn, pa. par. [BILIMPEN.]

bil'-wā, bāle, s. The name given in the Mahratta country, and some other parts of India, to a tree of the Orange family—the Bengal Quince (Egle Marmelos), a thorny tree with ternate leaves and a smooth yellow fruit with a hard rind. [EGLE, QUINCE.]

bi-māc'-u-late, bi-māc'-u-lā-tēd, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and maculatus, pa. par. of maculo, to make spotted; macula, a spot, suff. -ed; in Fr. bimaculé.]

Biol.: Having two spots.

bi-mā'-lēn, v. t. [From A. S. prefix bi, and mal=a spot, a mole.] To spot. (Piers Plowman, B. xiv. 4.)

bi-mā'-nā, s. pl. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and manus=a hand.]

Zool.: Cuvier's name for the first and highest order of Mammalia. Its characteristic is that the two anterior extremities are formed into hands, while the two hinder ones are real feet. This difference does not obtain even in the highest member of the Monkey or Quadumanous order. Cuvier includes under the Bimana only a single genus—Homo, or Man.

†bi'-māne, a. [Fr. bimane. From Lat. prefix bi=two, and manus=a hand.] Having two hands.

bi'-mā-noŷ, a. [Lat. bi=doubly, and manus=a hand.] Two-handed.

bi-mān'-u-al, a. [Lat. bi=two; manu(s)=hand; -al.] Utilizing both hands.

bi-mar'-gin-ate, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and marginatus, pa. par. of margino=to furnish with a margin or border; margo, genit. marginis=an edge, a border, margin. In Fr. bimarginé.]

Biol.: Double-bordered.

bi-māt'-tēr, s. [O. Eng. bi=by and by, and matter.] Unimportant matters.

bi-mā'ze, bi-mā'-sen, v. t. [The same as BEMAZE (q. v.).] (Chester Mysteries.) (Stratman.)

bi-mē'-dī-al, a. [In Ger. bimedial. From Lat. prefix bi=two, and medius=middle.]

Geom.: Made up of the sum of two medial lines.

Bimedial line, First Bimedial Line: A line produced by adding together two medial lines, commensurable only in power; it is incommensurable with either of these taken singly. Thus, if two straight lines, a and $\sqrt{2}a^2$, stand to each other the one as a side and the other as a diagonal of the same square, they are incommensurable, though a^2 and $2a^2$ are not. Their sum (the bimedral line) is $a + \sqrt{2}a^2$, which is incommensurable with both a and $\sqrt{2}a^2$.

†bi-mēm'-bral, a. [From Lat. bi=two, membrum=members, and Eng. suffix -al.] Having two members. (Used chiefly of sentences.)

bi-mene, by-mene (pret. biment*, bimente*), v. t. [A. S. bemēnan (pret. bimēnde)=to bemoan.] [BEMOAN.]

1. To bemoan, to weep for, to wail for.

2. Reflexively: To make one's complaint; to complain.

bi-mēn'-ing, pr. par. [BIMENE.]

†bi-mēn'-sal, a. [Lat. prefix bi=two, and mensis, a month.] Occurring once in two months. [BIMONTHLY.]

†bi-mēst'-rī-al, a. [From Lat. bimestri(s), and Eng. suffix -al. In Fr., Sp., Port., & Ital. bimestre.] Continuing for two months.

1. Pertaining to, or consisting of, two metals.

2. Pertaining to the use of two metals, usually gold and silver, as standards of monetary value.

bi-mēt'-al-lism, s. The use of a double monetary standard of value, usually of gold and silver. Bimetallists maintain that unsatisfactory conditions of the productive industries of the country are principally due to "the appreciation of gold and a corresponding fall in the prices of commodities produced by the people," and that the best and most effective remedy is to be secured by the free coinage of both gold and silver at a fixed ratio between the two metals. The platform of the Democratic party of the United States, adopted at Chicago, July 9, 1896, demanded "the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold, at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation," and that "the standard silver dollar shall be a full legal tender for all debts, public and private," and favored "such legislation as will prevent for the future the demonetization of any kind of legal tender money by private contract."

bi-mēt'-al-list, s. One who advocates the use of a double monetary standard of value.

bīm'-mōlle, s. [Ital.]

Music: A flat, b. [BEMOL.]

bi'-mōnth-lŷ, a. [From Lat. prefix bi, and Eng. monthly.] Happening, leaving, starting, &c., once in two months; as, a bimonthly mail, a mail which is dispatched once in two months. [BIMENSAL.]

bi-mūs'-cu-lar, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and Eng. muscular=pertaining to the muscles.] [MUSCULAR.]

Conchol.: Having two muscles, and consequently two muscular impressions on the shell. (Kirby.)

1. Been. (Halliwell: Torrent of Portugal.)

2. Are.

"If thou hast formed right true virtues face herein, Vertue her self can best discern to whom they written bin."

Spenser: Verses.

3. Were. (Narcs.)

4. Is.

¶ It occurs in this sense in some editions of Shakespeare, but in a song which he may have intended to be archaic.

"With every thing that pretty bin."

Shakesp.: Cymbeline, ii. 3.

In the Globe edition of Shakespeare bin is altered to is in this quotation.

bin, s. [A. S. bin, binne=a manger, crib, bin, hutch, or trough. In Dan. bing; Dut. ben=a basket, a hamper; Lat. benna (originally a Gael. word)=a kind of carriage; Wel. ben, men=a wain, a cart.] A box, or other inclosed place, where corn, bread, wine, or anything similar is kept. Hence such compounds as corn-bin, coal-bin, &c.

"The most convenient way of picking hops is into a long, square frame of wood called a bin."—Mortimer.

bin, interj. [Variation of ban, v., in the sense of curse, anathema upon.] A curse, an imprecation. (Jamieson.)

"Bin thae biting clegs."—Jamieson.

bi-nâ', vî-nâ', s. [In Hindust. bin; Hindi, bina; Mahratta, vina.] An Indian guitar, with a long finger-board, and a gourd attached to each end. Seven strings or wires wound round pegs in the usual way are attached to the finger-board—four on the surface and three at the sides. The instrument has about twenty frets. In the performance, one gourd is rested on the left shoulder and the other on the right hip. (Stainer & Barrett.)

†bin-a-cle, s. [BINNACLE.]

†bi'-nāl, a. [From Lat. bin(i)=two, and Eng. suff. -al.] [BINARY.] Double, twofold.

"Binal revenge all this."

Ford: Witch of Edmonton, iii. 2. (Richardson.)

bi-nam, pret. of v. [BENIM, BINIMEN.]

bi'-nāme, s. [BYNAME.] (Chaucer: Boeth. 2,333.)

bi'-nar-ŷ, bi'-nar-ŷe, a. & s. [In Fr. binaire; Sp., Port., & Ital. binario. From Lat. binarius=consisting of two; bin(i)=two by two, two apiece; from bi, with the distributive term nus.]

A. As adj.: Consisting of two, double, dual.

*B. As subst.: That which constitutes two.

"To make two or a binary, which is the first number, add but one unto one."—Fotherby: Atheomastix, p. 307.

¶ Binary was of old used as an antithesis to unity; now in such a case duality is the word employed.

"In nature are two supreme principles,

As, namely, unity and binary."

Davies: Wittes Pilgrimage, G. 4, b.

Binary arithmetic: A method of notation invented by Leibnitz, but which appears to have been in use in China about 4,000 years ago. As the term binary implies, there are only two characters in this notation; these are 1 and 0. By it, our 1 is noted by 1, our 2 by 10, 3 by 11, 4 by 100, 5 by 101, 6 by 110, 7 by 111, 8 by 1000, 9 by 1001, 10 by 1010, &c. The principle is that 0 multiplies by 2 in place of by 10, as on the common system. Some properties of numbers may be more simply presented on this plan than on the common one; but the number of places of figures required to express a sum of any magnitude is a fatal objection to its use. Indeed, Leibnitz himself did not recommend it for practical adoption.

Binary compound:

Chem.: A compound of two elements, or of an element and a compound performing the function of an element, or of two compounds performing the functions of elements.

"Among the secondary organic products of the vegetable class, we meet a few instances of binary compounds of simple elements."—Todd & Bowman: Physiol. Anat., Vol. I. (Introd.), p. 8.

Binary engine: Usually an engine having one cylinder, the piston being impelled by steam, which, having done its work there, is exhausted into another part of the apparatus, where it is allowed to communicate its unutilized heat to some liquid volatile at a lower temperature; the vapor of this second liquid, by its expansion in a second cylinder, yields additional useful force. Ether, chloroform, and bisulphide of carbon, have all been tried. (Knight.)

Binary form:

Music: The form of a movement which is founded on two principal themes or subjects. [SONATA FORM.] (Stainer & Barrett.)

Binary logarithms: A system of logarithms devised by Euler for facilitating musical calculations. Instead of having, like the common system of logarithms, 1 as the logarithm of 10, and 43,429,448 as the modulus, it had 1 as the logarithm of 2, and the modulus 1,442,695.

Binary measure: Common time, that is, in which the time of rising is equal to that of falling. [TONIC SOL-FA.]

bōil, bōŷ; pōūt, jōwī; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, aŷ; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f.
-cian, -tian = shān. -tion, -sion = shūn; -tion, -sion = zhūn. -tious, -cious, -sious = shūs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bēl, dēl.

Binary number: A number composed of two units.

Binary scale:

Arith.: A uniform scale of notation, the ratio of which is two.

Binary star: A star which, closely examined by the telescope, is found to consist of two stars revolving around their common center of gravity. In some cases they are colored differently from each other. In 1803 Sir William Herschel discovered that Gamma Leonis, Epsilon Bootis, Zeta Herculis, Delta Serpentis, and Gamma Virginis are revolving double stars, and others, including Castor, have since been added to the list, a large proportion of the later discoveries having been made by Mr. D. S. Burnham of Chicago. This well known authority is now connected with the observatory of the North Western University. The period of revolution in various cases has been determined. It is found to vary from 43 to more than 1,200 years.

Binary system:

Zoöl., &c.: A system of classification by which each sub-kingdom, class, order, &c., is perpetually divided into two, the one with a positive and the other with a negative character, till genera are reached. For instance, on this system, the animal sub-kingdom is divided into Vertebrata and Invertebrata, that is, animals which have, and animals which have not, vetebre. The first is a natural combination; the second is not so, for several of its more or less subordinate sections, such as Articulata, Mollusca, &c., are as distinct from each other as the Vertebrata are from the Invertebrata in general. The Rev. Prof. Fleming was the great advocate of the Binary or Dichotomous system, which he carried out in his "Philosophy of Zoölogy" and his "British Animals," while Swainson, one of the great apostles of the rival Quinary system, was its determined foe.

"Binary or dichotomous systems, although regulated by a principle, are among the most artificial arrangements that have been ever invented."—Swainson. Geog. Class. of Animals, § 250.

Binary theory:

Chem.: A hypothesis proposed by Davy to reduce the haloid salts (as NaCl) and the oxygen salts (as NaNO₃) to the same type, the monad Cl' being replaced by the monad radical containing oxygen (NO₃)'. Acids are hydrogen salts, as HCl, or H(NO₃)'. A radical is only part of a molecule which can unite with or replace an element or another radical, atomicity for atomicity. Thus the dyad radical (SO₄)" can replace two monad radicals, (NO₃)', as in the equation Pb"(NO₃)₂ + Mg"(SO₄)" = Pb"(SO₄)" + Mg"(NO₃)₂. A radical cannot exist in a separate state. [See RADICAL.]

bi-nāte, a. [From Lat. bini=two by two, and Eng. suff. -ate.]

Bot.: Growing two together. Having two leaflets growing from the same point at the apex of the common petiole. The same as bifoliate.

bind, *bynde, *bin-dēn, *bȳn'-dȳn (pret. bound, bound*, bound*; pa. par. bound, bounden, bound*, bound*), v. t. & i. [A. S. bindan, pret. band, bunde, pa. par. bunden=(1) to bind, tie, capture, (2) to pretend; gebīndan (same meaning); Sw. & Icel. binda; Dan. binde; Dut. binden, inbinden, verbinden; Ger. binden; Goth. bindan, gabindan; Pers. bandan, bandidan=to bind, to shut; Hindust. bāndhna=to bind; Mahratta bandhane; Sansc. bandh.]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally:

1. To tie or fasten artificially.

(1) To tie a person or thing by means of cords, ropes, chains, or anything similar. In the case of persons this may be to prevent one from becoming free; to bandage a bleeding wound; to serve for utility or ornament, or for any other purpose.

"Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them."—Matthew xiii. 30.

"Thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by."—Joshua ii. 18.

(2) To keep in shape and strengthen by means of an artificial band or border, boards, backs, or anything similar. Used—

(a) Of the border sewed on a carpet, or anything similar.

(b) Of the fastening a wheel by means of a line.

(c) Of the stitching, pressing, and cutting a book, and of placing covers upon it. [BOOKBINDING.]

"Was ever book, containing such vile matter, So fairly bound?"

Shakesp.: Romeo and Juliet, iii. 2.

Binate Leaf.

"Those who could never read the grammar, When my dear volumes touch the hammer, May think books best, as richest bound!"—Prior.

2. To confine or restrain by physical action. (Used of the operations of nature under the Divine control.)

(1) Operating upon persons: To restrain by moral action from movement. Specially—

(a) In the case of one bent double by disease.

"And, behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself. . . . And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the Sabbath day?"—Luke xiii. 11, 16.

(b) Any hindering of the flux of the bowels, or making them costive.

"Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge and parts that bind the body."—Bacon.

(2) Operating upon things: To restrain by the operation of the law of gravitation.

"He bindeth the floods from overflowing."—Job xxviii. 11.

II. Figuratively:

1. To exercise restraint or moral compulsion upon the human mind, heart, conscience, or will, or upon the will of any of the inferior animals.

(a) Upon man: By natural or by human law, by an oath, a contract, a promise, a vow, considerations of duty, kindness shown to one, an overmastering moral impulse, or some other influence or necessity, to do some act or abstain from doing it.

"The law, by which all creatures else are bound, Binds man, the lord of all."

Cowper: The Task, bk. i.

"... traitors who were ready to take any oath, and whom no oath could bind."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., vol. iv., ch. xxii.

(b) Upon one of the inferior animals.

"You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying."—Bacon.

2. To establish by a judicial decision; to confirm; to ratify.

"... whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven."—Matthew xvi. 19.

B. Intransitive:

1. To contract its own parts together; to grow stiff and hard.

2. To make costive.

3. To be obligatory.

"The promises and bargains for truck, between a Swiss and an Indian, in the woods of America, are binding to them, . . ."—Locke.

C. In special phrases: (In those which follow, bind is uniformly transitive.)

(1) Bound in the spirit: Gr. dedemenos tō pneumati, lit., bound to the spirit=bound to one's own spirit, the ardent spirit leading forward the captive body=under a resistless impulse.

"And now, behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there."—Acts xx. 22.

(2) To bind an apprentice. [Bind out.]

(3) To bind down: To restrain one from perfect freedom on any matter by inducing him to come under formal written stipulations with regard to it.

(4) To bind in: To shut in, so as to make one feel like a prisoner. Used—

(a) Of a physical restraint around one.

"In such a dismal place, Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers, Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps,"

Dryden.

(b) Of a moral restraint.

"Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in To saucy doubts and fears."

Shakesp.: Macbeth, iii. 4.

(5) To bind out, or simply to bind an apprentice, to draw out indentures, guaranteeing his services to a particular master, on certain conditions, for a specified time.

(6) Law. To bind over: To oblige to make appearance in a court of law under penalties for failing to do so.

"Sir Roger was staggered with the reports concerning this woman, and would have bound her over to the county sessions."—Addison.

(7) To bind to:

(i.) To place under indentures or contract, or any other obligation to a person.

"Art thou bound to a wife, seek not to be loosed."—1 Cor. vii. 27.

(ii.) To impel to a course of action.

(a) By considerations of duty.

"Though I am bound to every act of duty, I am not bound to that all slaves are free to."

Shakesp.: Othello, iii. 3.

(b) By the lower propensities of one's nature.

"If still thou dost retain The same ill habits, the same follies too, Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave,"

Dryden.

(8) To bind up:

(i.) Lit.: To tie up with bandages or anything similar. Used—

(a) Of a wound tied up with bandages.

"... and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds."—Luke x. 33, 34.

(b) Of anything else.

"Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples."—Isaiah viii. 16.

(ii.) Fig.: To confine, to restrain.

"... yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it for the time to one object, from which it will not be taken off."—Locke.

¶(a) Crabb thus distinguishes the verbs to bind and to tie: "Binding is performed by circumvolution round a body; tying, by involution within itself. Some bodies are bound without being tied; others are tied without being bound; a wounded leg is bound but not tied; a string is tied but not bound; a riband may sometimes be bound round the head, and tied under the chin. Binding, therefore, serves to keep several things in a compact form together; tying may serve to prevent one single body separating from another; a criminal is bound hand and foot; he is tied to a stake." "Binding and tying likewise differ in degree; binding serves to produce adhesion in all the parts of a body; tying only to produce contact in a single part." Similarly, in the figurative use of the terms, a "bond of union is applicable to a large body with many component parts; a tie of affection marks an adhesion between individual minds."

(b) To bind, to oblige, and to engage are thus discriminated: "Bind is more forcible and coercive than oblige; oblige than engage. We are bound by an oath, obliged by circumstances, and engaged by promises. Conscience binds, prudence or necessity oblige, honor and principle engage. A parent is bound no less by the law of his conscience, than by those of the community to which he belongs, to provide for his helpless offspring. Politeness obliges men of the world to preserve a friendly exterior toward those for whom they have no regard. When we are engaged in the service of our king and country, we cannot shrink from our duty without exposing ourselves to the infamy of all the world." "A debtor is bound to pay by virtue of a written instrument in law; he is obliged to pay in consequence of the importunate demands of the creditor; he is engaged to pay in consequence of a promise given. A bond is the strictest deed in law; an obligation binds under pain of a pecuniary loss; an engagement is mostly verbal, and rests entirely on the rectitude of the parties." (Crabb: English Synonyms.)

bind, *bȳnde (English), bīnd, *bīnde (Scotch), s. [From bind, v. (q. v.)]

A. Ordinary Language:

(b) The iron wrought around the dead-eyes.

binding-cloth, s.

Cloth Manuf.: Dyed and stamped muslin for covering books. The dyed cloth is passed between engraved rollers, or is worked after being cut into patterns of the required size. The engraved cylinders of hard steel confer the impress characteristic of the back and sides along with embossed designs over the surface in sharp relief. It is a cheap and good substitute for leather, which it has nearly superseded for general use.

In Sewing-machines: A device adapted to receive a binding and fold it about the edge of a piece of material to be bound. Two methods have been tried. 1. A flattened tube folded gradually on itself longitudinally from near its receiving to its delivering end, but with a space left for the edge of the material. 2. Adjustable hooks projecting through the face of a guide and facing each other; the binding is directed by the guide and hooks, the material to be bound rests between the hooks, and the latter are adjustable, to lap the binding more or less on either side. Some binders turn in or hem the edges of a bias strip of cloth as it is applied for a binding.

Carp.: A binder, a joist whose ends rest upon the wall-plates, and which support the bridging or floor joists above and the ceiling joists below. The binding-joint is employed to carry common joists when the area of the floor or ceiling is so large that it is thrown into bays. With large floors the binding-joists are supported by girders. [GIRDER.] Binding-joists should have the following dimensions:

Length of Bearing, feet	6	8	10	12	14	16	18	20
Depth..... inches	6	7	8	9	10	11	12	13
Width..... inches	4	4½	5	5½	6	6½	7	7½

binding-plate, s. One of the side plates of a puddling or boiling furnace, which are tied together by bolts across the furnace, and by flanges, and serve to bind the parts of the furnace together and prevent the spreading of the arched roofs of the furnace and iron chamber. [PUDDLING-FURNACE.] binding-rafter, s.

Carp.: A longitudinal timber in a roof, supporting the rafters at a point between the comb and eave.

binding-screw, s. A set-screw which binds or clamps two parts together. The term is applied, especially in instruments of graduation and measurement, to a screw which clamps a part in a given position of adjustment. For instance, the screw by which the wire of a galvanic battery is held in close contact with other metallic portions in the circuit is regarded as a binding-screw. (Knight.)

binding-screw clamp, s.

Galvanism: A device used with voltaic batteries; the lower portion is a clamp for the zinc or copper element, which is suspended in the bath; the upper has a hole for the conductor-wire, and a screw which comes forcibly down upon it to insure contact.

binding-strakes, s. pl.

Shipbuilding: Thick strakes, planking, or wales, at points where they may be bolted to knees, shelf-pieces, &c.

binding-wire, s. The wrapping-wire for attaching pieces which are to be soldered together, or to hold in intimate contact the parts concerned in a voltaic circuit.

bind'-īng-lŷ, adv. [Eng. binding; -ly.] In such manner as to bind.

bind'-īng-nēss, s. [Eng. binding; -ness.] The quality of being binding; that is, of having force to bind. (Coleridge.)

bind'-īngŝ, s.

Shipbuilding. [BINDING, C.]

bīn'-dle, s. [A. S. bindele=a binding, tying, or fastening with bands. In Sw. bindel=bandage, a fillet; Dan. & Dut. bindzel. From Sw. binda; Dan. binde; Dut. & Ger. binden=to bind.] The cord or rope that binds anything, whether made of hemp or straw. (Scotch.) (Jamieson.)

bind'-wēed, s. [Eng. bindā; weed=the weed that binds, so called from its long, slender, twining stem.]

1. The English name of the plants belonging to the extensive genus Convolvulus.

† Bindweeds (pl.) is the English designation given by Lindley to the order Convolvulaceæ.

2. Smilax aspera, a climbing shrub, a native of the south of France, of Italy, &c.

† Bindweed is the local name of several other species of plants. It is applied to the Common Ragwort (Senecio Jacobæa), but in this case it is really a corruption of Bunweed (q. v.).

Black Bindweed: Polygonum convolvulus, L.

Blue Bindweed: Solanum dulcamara, L. (Ben Jonson: Vision of Delight.)

Hooded Bindweeds: Plants of the family Convolvulaceæ and the genus Calystegia. It is only a book name.

Ivy Bindweed: Polygonum convolvulus, L.

Nightshade Bindweed: Circæa lutetiana, L.

Sea Bindweed: Convolvulus soldanella, L.

Small Bindweed: Convolvulus arvensis, L.

bind'-with, s. [Eng. bind, and with, s. So called because it is used in place of "withs," or withes, for binding up other plants. (Prior.)] The Clematis vitalba, or Travelers' Joy.

bind'-wood (d of bind mute), s. [Eng. bind; -wood=the wood that binds.] A Scotch name for Ivy (Hedera helix). (Jamieson.)

†bine, *bŷne, s. [From bind.] The running or climbing stem of a plant. (Used especially of the hop plant.) [BIND, s., B. I.] (Gardner.)

bīn-ē-ōthe, *bī-nē-then, prep. & adv. The same as BENEATH (q. v.).

bī-nēr'-vāte, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and Eng. nervate=pertaining to a nerve.] [NERVE.]

Bot.: Two-nerved. Applied to leaves which have two raised "nerves" or "veins" along their leaf.

bi-nethe, *bi-ne-then, prep. & adv. [BENEATH.]

bīn'-wēed, s. [Bine=bind, and weed.] A name sometimes given to a plant, Convolvulus sepium, more commonly called Bindweed (q. v.). (Britten & Holland.)

bing (1), (Scotch & O. Eng.), s. [Sw. binge=a heap; Icel. bingr. Binge in Dan. means not a heap, but a bin.]

1. Gen.: A heap.

"Quhen thay depulye the mekil bing of quhete."
Douglas: Virgil, 113, 49.

"Potato-bings are snugged up frae skaith O' coming winter's biting, frosty breath."

Burns: The Brigs of Ayr.

2. Spec.: A pile of wood, immediately designed as a funeral pile.

"The grete bing was vpbeildit wele,

Nautical:

1. (Of the older and more correct form bittacle): Same meaning as 2 (q. v.).

"Bittacle, a timber frame, where the compass stands before the steersman."—Glossog. Nov., 2d ed. (1719.)

¶ The same form is in Martin's Old English Dict. (1754) and Johnson's Dict. (1773). In these and others of similar dates, bittacle alone occurs. Sheridan's Dict., 4th ed. (1797), has both binacle and bittacle, and under the latter these words occur: "now usually called binacle." Thus apparently the transition from bittacle to binnacle was made between the years 1773 and 1797. Todd (2d ed., 1827) omits binnacle and goes back to bittacle. Webster (ed. 1848) has both binnacle and bittacle, giving the full explanation of the word under the former spelling.

2. (Of the modern and corrupt spelling binnacle, probably from its being erroneously supposed to mean a little binn or bin): A wooden case or box in which the compass on board a ship is kept to protect it from injury. A light is placed within it at night to insure that its indications are seen. It is placed immediately in front of the wheel or steering apparatus, and secured to the deck, usually by metal stays. The after portion has glass windows, so that the compass is at all times visible to the helmsman, who stands at the wheel.

bīnne, s. [A. S. binne=a bin, a trough.] A temporary inclosure for preserving grain. [BIN.] (Scotch.)

bin-nen, prep. & adv. [A. S. binnan=within.] Within.

"And it wurth soth binnen swile sel."

Story of Genesis and Exodus, 1,032.

†bīn'-nēr, v. i. [Perhaps from Wel. buancor=swift; buanned=rapid.]

Of wheels: To move round rapidly with a whirling sound. (Jamieson.)

bīn'-nīte, s. [From the valley of Binnen, Binnin, or Binnenthal in Switzerland, where it occurs; suff. -ite (Min.) (q. v.).]

Mineralogy:

1. A brittle mineral with isometric crystals; hardness, 4.5; sp. gr., 4.477; luster, metallic; color, brownish, greenish, or on a fresh fracture black; streak, cherry-red. Composition: Snlpur, 27.55 to 32.73; arsenic, 18.98-30.06; copper, 37.74-46.24; lead, 0-2.75; silver, 1.23-1.91; iron, 0-0.82. It occurs in dolomite at Binnen (see etym.). It is called also Dufrenoy-site. (Dana.)

2. (In Ger. binnit.) The same as Sartorite (q. v.).

†bīn'-ō-cle, s. [From Fr. binocle; Ital. binocolo; Lat. bini=two by two, and oculus=eye.] A binocular telescope (q. v.).

bī-nōc'-u-lar, a. [In Fr. binoculaire; from bini=two by two, and oculus=an eye.]

1. Having two eyes.

"Most animals are binocular, spiders for the most part octonocular, and some senocular."—Derham.

2. Pertaining to both eyes; as, "binocular vision."

3. Having two tubes, each furnished above with an eye-glass, so as to enable one to see with both eyes at once. Many opera-glasses, telescopes, and microscopes are now binocular. (See compound words.)

binocular eye-piece, s.

Optics: An eye-piece so constructed and applied to the object-glass as to divide the optical pencil transmitted to the latter, and form, as to each part of the divided pencil, a real or virtual image of the object beyond the place of division.

binocular-glass, s.

Optics: An eye-glass or telescope to which both eyes may be applied.

binocular microscope, s.

Optics: A microscope with two eye-glasses, so that both eyes may use it simultaneously. When the invention of the microscope by Professor Wheatstone had called attention to the value of binocular vision, attempts were made to render microscopes also binocular. Professor Riddel of New Orleans, Mr. Wenham of London, and Professor Nachet experimented, all more or less successfully, in this direction.

Optics: A pair of telescopes mounted in a stand, and having a parallel adjustment for the width between the eyes. The tubes have a coincident horizontal and vertical adjustment for altitude and azimuth. The inventor of this instrument is said to have been a Capuchin monk, Schyrleus de Rheita. Galileo also made a binocular telescope in 1617.

bī-nōc'-u-lāte, a. [From Lat. bini=two by two, oculus=an eye, and suff. -ate.] Having two eyes. [BINOCULAR.]

bī-nōc'-u-lūs, s. [From Lat. bini=two by two, and oculus=an eye.]

Zoöl.: The name given by Geoffroy, Leach, &c., to a genus of entomostracous Crustaceans, now more generally called Apus (q. v.).

bī-nō'-dāl, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and Eng. nodal=pertaining to a node; from Latin nodus=a knot.]

Bot.: Having two nodes. It is used specially of the inflorescence called the cyme, as existing in some monocotyledonous plants.

bī-nō'-mī-al, a. & s. [Lat. prefix bi=two; nom(en)=a name; i connective; and Eng. suff. -al. In Fr. binome; Port. binomo.]

A. As adjective:

1. Phys. Science: Having two distinct names. [BINOMIAL SYSTEM.]

2. Algebra: Pertaining to a quantity consisting of two terms united together by the signs + or -. If × joins them, they are only a monomial. A binomial is ranked under the general term polynomial. [BINOMIAL THEOREM.]

B. As substan.: A quantity consisting of two terms united together by the signs + or -.

binomial system.

Nomenclature of Animals, Plants, &c.: A system (that which now obtains) which gives to an animal, a plant, or other natural object, two names, the first to indicate the genus, and the second the species to which it belongs, as Canis familiaris (the dog), Bellis perennis (the daisy).

"This system [of zoological nomenclature] is called the binomial system from the circumstance that, according to this method, every animal receives two names, one belonging to itself exclusively, the other in common with all the other species of the genus in which it is included."—Dallas: Nat. Hist.; Anim. King., p. 11.

Algebra: A theorem, or it may be called a law, discovered by Sir Isaac Newton, by which a binomial quantity can be raised to any power without the trouble of a series of actual multiplications. Actual multiplication shows that the 7th power of $x + a$ is $x^7 + 7x^6a + 21x^5a^2 + 35x^4a^3 + 35x^3a^4 + 21x^2a^5 + 7xa^6 + a^7$. It is evident that the several powers of the two letters x and a and the co-efficients stand so related to each other that study of them might enable one to deduce a law from them. In its most abstract form it is this: If $(x + a)$ be raised to the n th power, that is, bī-o-biāst, s. [Gr. bios=life, and blastos=germ.] A minute mass of living protoplasm.

$$(x + a)^n, \text{ it } = xn + nxn-1a + \frac{n \cdot (n-1)}{1 \cdot 2}$$

$$(xn-2a^2 + \frac{n \cdot (n-1) \cdot (n-2)}{1 \cdot 2 \cdot 3} xn-3a^3 + \dots \&c.$$

bī-ōc'-ēl-lāte, a. [From Lat. pref. bi=two, and ocellatus=that which has ocelli; from ocellus=an eyelet, a little eye; dimin. of oculus=an eye.]

Entom.: Having two ocelli on its wings.

bī-ō-chēm'-īc, a. [BIOCHEMISTRY.] Of or pertaining to biochemistry.

bī-ō-chēm'-īst, s. One versed in the science of biochemistry.

bī-ō-chēm'-īst-rŷ, s. [Gr. bios, life, and Eng. chemistry.] The science which treats of the vital phenomena dependent upon chemical influences. It has been recently established that light, heat, electricity, and even gravitation influence the lower animals in the same manner as they influence plant life. Certain chemical agents directly attract or repel plant germs and lower animals, and certain plants produce and emit certain agents. Recent investigations by Professors Loeb, Friedlander, and others, prove that by certain excitations certain reflex curves are brought into action with absolute certainty. They show, among other things, that the chemical reaction of food directly causes an appropriate reflex movement of the alimentary organs. The proboscis of a bee, for instance, will sip honey even if the head of the bee is completely severed from the rest of the body. Professor Loeb, biochemist of the University of Chicago, has recently succeeded in prolonging the life of an individual cell by chemical agency, and some enthusiastic biochemic investigators predict that the time is not far distant when the life of an organism itself may be indefinitely prolonged through the application of the principles of biochemistry.

bī-ō-dŷ-nām'-īcs, s. [From Gr. bios=life, and Eng. dynamics (q. v.).] The dynamics of life, the doctrine of vital forces or activity. (Dunglison.)

bī-ō-gēn'-ē-sīs, bī-ō-gēn'-ē-sīs, s. [Gr. bios=life, and genesis=generation.]

Biol.: A scientific word invented by Professor Huxley, and first used by him in his address, as President of the British Association, at Liverpool, 1870, to indicate the view that living matter can be produced only from that which is itself living. It is opposed to abiogenesis. The first who established the doctrine of biogenesis was Francesco Redi. He considered that there were two kinds of it; the first, and by far the most common, that in which the offspring passes through the same series of changes as the parent, and the second, that in which the offspring is altogether and permanently unlike the parent. The former is now called HOMOGENESIS and the latter XENOGENESIS (q. v.). (See also ABIOGENESIS and PARTHENOGENESIS.) Professor Huxley, after summing up the arguments for and against Redi's great doctrine of biogenesis, adds the words, "Which appears to me, with the limitations I have expressed, to be victorious along the whole line at the present day." (Huxley: Brit. Assoc. Report, 1870, pp. lxxvi.)

bī-ōg'-ēn-īst, s. A believer in the doctrine of biogeny.

bī-ōg'-ēn-ŷ, bī-ōg'-ēn-ŷ, s. [Gr. bios=life, and gennao=to beget, to engender.]

Biol.: The doctrine that life originates only from life. The same as BIOGENESIS (q. v.).

bī-ō-grāph, s. An instrument for throwing upon canvas lifelike, moving pictures taken by the kinetograph or similar instrument. There are various forms of this instrument, the best known of which is the vitascop (q. v.).

bī-ōg'-raph-ēr, s. [From Eng. biograph(y); -er. In Sw. biograf; Dan. & Ger. biograph; Fr. biographe; Port. biographo; Ital. biografo; all from Gr. bios=the time or course of life, life, and graphō=to write.] [BIOGRAPHY.] One who writes the lives or memoirs of persons deceased.

¶ It is used—

(1) As a simple word:

"... that industrious and exact antiquary and biographer, Mr. Anthony à Wood, . . ."—Wood: Athenæ Oxon.; Bookseller to the Reader.

(2) In compos.: In the term autobiographer=one who is a biographer of himself, i. e., who writes his own life or memoirs. [AUTOBIOGRAPHER.]

bī-ō-grāph'-ī-a, s. [BIOGRAPHY.]

†bī-ō-grāph'-īc, bī-ō-grāph'-ī-cal, a. [In Fr. biographique; Port. biografico; from Gr. bios=course of life, and graphikos=capable of drawing, painting, or writing.] Pertaining to biography. [BIOGRAPHY.]

bī-ō-grāph'-ī-cal-lŷ, adv. [Eng. biographical; -ly.] After the manner of biography or of a biographer.

bī-ōg'-ra-phīze, v. t. [Biograph(y), term. -ize.] To write the life of a person.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camel, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trŷ, Sŷrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

bi-ōg'-ra-phŷ, bi-ō-grāph'-i-a, s. [In Ger. & Fr. biographie; Port. biographia; Ital. & Sp. biografía. From Gr. bios=course of life such as man leads, as opposed to zōē, that led by the inferior animals. Bios is used also to mean biography. Graphy is from Gr. graphē=a delineation, a writing, a description; graphō=to grave, to write.] The written life of an eminent person. It is supposed to be fuller than memoirs, which simply record the more memorable scenes in his history. The word biography is quite recent. As Trench shows, it came into the language first as biographia. This latter term, though it looks Greek, or Latin borrowed from Greek, is really in neither tongue, though it occurs in Portuguese, and analogous words exist in French, Italian, and Spanish. [See etym.] Though the term biography is modern, the kind of literature which it describes is ancient. In the Book of Genesis there are biographies, or at least memoirs, of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and others. Homer's "Odyssey" may be considered to be an extended biography of Ulysses, limited, however, to the most interesting period of his life—that of his wanderings. Though the "Iliad" may be loosely called a history of the Trojan war, yet, more accurately, it is a chapter from the biography of Achilles, describing calamities he brought upon the Greeks by the revenge which he took on Agamemnon for carrying off his female captive Briseis. The most elaborate ancient Greek biography was Plutarch's Parallel Lives (Biōi Parallēloi) consisting of forty-six memoirs of Greek, Roman, and other celebrities; it was published about A. D. 80. In B. C. 44, Cornelius Nepos had sent forth a biographical work, his Vitæ Imperatorum, Lives of Commanders.

In more modern times very extended biographies have been attempted. Thus France has its Biographie Universelle in fifty-two volumes, published between 1810 and 1828, and England, among other works, possesses its Biographia Britannica, five volumes (1747-1766), its English General Biographical Dictionary, eleven volumes (1762), and Chalmers' Biographical Dictionary, thirty-two volumes (1812-1817), which was but a larger edition of the before-mentioned General Biographical Dictionary.

Among works of more limited aim may be noted various Lives of the Saints, Fox's Book of Martyrs, various Lives of the Poets, Boswell's Life of Johnson, and finally, Men of the Time, in which last work are memoirs of living instead of dead heroes.

One branch of biography is autobiography, in which a person gives his own life or memoirs. Cæsar's Commentaries is a most valuable example of this kind of writing.

Biography is properly a department of history which should be a history not solely of eminent personages, but of the people also over whom they rule. The more prominent a person has been, the more nearly does his biography become identical with history in the ordinary sense. A life or memoir of Martin Luther, Napoleon I., Washington, or Lincoln, is, in all essential particulars, history, and that not of a solitary nation, but of the world.

¶ Biography is used—

(1) As a simple word.
"Biographia, or the history of particular men's lives, comes next to be considered."—Dryden.

"... no species of writing seems more worthy of cultivation than biography, since none can more certainly enchain the heart by irresistible interest, or more widely diffuse instruction to every diversity of condition."—Johnson; Rambler, No. 60.

(2) As a compound, in the term autobiographer (q. v.).

bi-ō-lōg'-i-cal, a. [In Fr. biologique; from Gr. bios=course of life, and logikos=pertaining to speech or reason; logos=a word, . . . a discourse; suff. -al.]

Phys. Science: Pertaining or relating to the science of biology.

"... the state of biological science . . ."—Dr. Allen Thomson; Brit. Assoc. Rep. (1871), pt. ii., 114.

"... biological research . . ."—Ibid.

bi-ōl'-ō-gist, s. [Gr. bios=course of life, and logistēs=a calculator, a reasoner; logizomai=to count, reckon; from logos=a word, a discourse.]

Phys. Science: One who cultivates the science of biology.

"... the problems and argumentations familiar to the professed biologist, . . ."—Professor Rolleston; Brit. Assoc. Rep. (1870), pt. ii., 92.

bi-ōl'-ō-gŷ, s. [In Fr. biologie; from Gr. bios=course of life (BIOGRAPHY), and logos= . . . discourse.]

Phys. Science: A term, first introduced by Treviranus of Bremen, recently adopted by the leading English-speaking naturalists, and now obtaining universal currency. It is used in two senses—

(1) (In a more restricted sense): Physiology.
"... the word Biology is at present used in two senses, the one wider, the other more restricted. In this latter sense the word becomes equivalent to the older and still more currently used word 'Physiology.'"—Professor Rolleston; Brit. Assoc. Rep. (1870), pt. ii., 96.

(2) (In a wider sense): The science of life in its widest acceptation. It specially addresses itself to scientific inquiries into the first origin of life and the changes it has undergone from the earliest traceable period until now.

bi-ōl'-sīs, s. [Gr. bios=life, and luein=to loosen.] The dissolution of a living organism; the devitalization of living tissue.

bi-ō-lŷt'-ic, a. Pertaining to biolysis; tending to destroy life.

bi-ōm'-ē-tēr, s. [Gr. bios=life, and metron=a measure.] An instrument for registering a person's vital force, invented in 1898 by Dr. Baraduc, of Paris, France.

bi-ōm'-ē-trŷ, s. [Gr. bios=life, and metron=a measure.] The estimation of the probable duration of life.

bi-ō-phŷ-tŭm, s. [Gr. bios=life, and phyton=a plant, phyō=to bring forth.]

Bot.: A genus of plants belonging to the order Oxalidaceæ (Oxalids). The Biophytum sensitivum (Sensitive Biophytum) has pinnate leaves, irritable or sensitive. It is a very pretty annual.

bi-ō-plāsm, s. [Gr. bios=life, course of life, and plasma=that which is capable of being fashioned, an image; from plassō=to form, mold, or shape.]

Biol.: A term introduced by Prof. L. S. Beale, an English scientist, to designate forming, living, or germinal matter; the living matter of living beings. The term protoplasm had been previously used in an analogous sense, but Dr. Beale felt precluded from adopting it by the fact that it was used by most writers, and notably by Professor Huxley, in a widely extended sense, so as to require the introduction of a word more limited in signification. It is distinguished from formed matter; indeed, the extension of the one and that of the other occur under different and often opposite conditions. All the organs of the body come from bioplasm. (Beale: Bioplasm, 1872.)

bi-ē-plāst, s. [Gr. bios=course of life, and plastos=formed, molded; from plassō=to form, to mold.]

Biol.: A little nucleus of germinal matter, many of which are scattered through the tissues of the body. It is from these that the growth of new matter proceeds. In the process of healing of a wound near the surface of the body, "lymph" is poured out, in which may be found bioplasts which have descended from white blood corpuscles. Of these, some produce epithelium, others fibrous connective tissue, unless they be too freely nourished, in which case they grow and multiply rapidly, and no kind of tissue whatever results, but pus is alone formed. (Beale: Bioplasm, § 43, 133.)

bi-ō-tine, bi-ō-ti'-na, s. [Ital. biotina. From Biot, a French naturalist.] A mineral, called also Anorthite (q. v.).

bi-ō-tite, s. [Named after Biot, a French naturalist; suff. -ite.]

Min.: A hexagonal and an optically uniaxial mineral, formerly called Magnesia Mica, Hexagonal Mica, and Uniaxial Mica. It exists in tabular prisms, in disseminated scales, or in massive aggregations of cleavable scales. Color: silvery-white, rarely bottle-green, and by transmitted light often fiery-red. Composition a good deal varies. One specimen had: silica, 40.00; alumina, 16.16; sesquioxide of iron, 7.50; oxide of manganese, 21.54; potassa, 10.83; water, 3.0; iron, 0.50; and titanate acid, 0.2. Rubellan is an altered biotite and Eukamptite one of a hydrous type. (Dana.)

bĭp'-ar-ōŭs, a. [Lat. prefix bi=two, and parere=to bring forth, to bear.] Bringing forth two at a birth. (Johnson.)

bi-par'-tĕd, ĭby-par-ted, a. [Lat. prefix bi=two, and Eng. parted (q. v.).] Divided into two.

bi-par'-tĭ-ble, a. [In Fr. bipartible. From Lat. bipartio=to divide into two parts. Lat. pref. bi=two, and partibilis=divisible; partio=to share, to part; pars=a part.]

Bot.: Capable of being parted in two. Example: the Calyx of Protea.

bi-par'-tĭ-ent, a. & s. [Lat. bipartiens, *pr. par. of bipartio.] [See BIPARTIBLE.]

A. As adjective: Dividing into two parts without leaving a remainder. (Glossog. Nova.)

¶ A bipartient number: The same as B. substantive (q. v.).

B. As substantive: A number which divides another into two equal parts without leaving a fraction. Thus 4 is a bipartient of 8, and 25 of 50.

bi-par'-tĭle, a. [From Lat. prefix bi, part, and suff. -ile.] Bipartible, which may be divided into two. (Martyn.)

bi-par'-tĭte, a. [In Ital. bipartito; from Lat. bipartitus, pa. par. of bipartio=to divide into two parts; prefix bi=two, and partio=to share, to part, pars=a part. In Fr. biparti.] Divided into two, biparted. Used—

1. Spec.: Of things material.

"His [Alexander's] empire was bipartite into Asia and Syria."—Gregory; Posthuma, p. 159.

2. Fig.: Of things not material.

"The divine fate is also bipartite; some theists supposing God both to decree and to do all things in us (evil as well as good), or by His immediate influence to determine all actions, and so make them alike necessary to us."—Cudworth: Intellectual System, Pref., p. 1.

Bot.: Parted in two from the apex almost but not quite to the base. Applied to leaves, &c.

ĭbi-par-tĭ-tion, s. [In Fr. bipartition; from Lat. bipartitum, supine of bipartio=to divide into two parts; prefix bi=two, and partio=to share, to part; pars=a part.] The act or operation of dividing into two parts. The state of being so divided.

ĭbi-pā-tent, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and Eng. patent.] Open on both sides. (Glossog. Nova.)

bi-peche, bi-pe-chen (pa. par. bipehte), v. t. [A. S. bepæcan; pa. par. bepæht=to deceive or seduce.] To deceive. (O. Eng. Hom., i. 91.)

bi-pĕc'-tĭn-āte, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and pectinatus=sloped two opposite ways, like a comb; pecten=a comb; pecto=to comb.]

Bot., &c.: Having two margins, each pectinate, i. e., toothed like a comb.

bi-pĕd, a. & s. [In Fr. bipède; Port. bipede. From Lat. prefix bi=two, and pes, genit. pedis=foot.]

A. As adjective: Having two feet.

"By which the man, when heavenly life was ceased, Became a helpless, naked, biped beast."—Byron: An Epistle. (Richardson.)

B. As substantive: A man or other being walking on two feet, as contradistinguished from a quadruped walking on four.

"No serpent or fishes oviparous, have any stones at all, neither biped nor quadruped oviparous have any exteriorly."—Browne: Vulgar Errors.

bi-pĕd-al, bĭp'-ĕd-al, a. [In Fr. bipédal; from Lat. bipes, genit. bipedis=two-footed.] [BIPED.] Having two feet.

"... in this case it would have become either more strictly quadruped or bipedal."—Darwin: Descent of Man, Pt. I., ch. iv.

bi-pĕl'-tā-ta, s. pl. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and pelta; Gr. peltē=a small, light shield of leather, without a rim. It was generally crescent-shaped.]

Zoöl.: Cuvier's name for a family of Crustaceans, one of two making up the order Stomapoda. It was so called because the testa is divided into two bucklers, whereas in the other family, the Unipeltata, there is but one. The former is now generally called Phyllosomidæ, and the latter Squillidæ, while a third family, the Mysidæ, has been placed with them under the Stomapoda. (See these terms.)

bi-pĕl'-tāte, a. [BIPELTATA.]

Zoöl.: Having a covering like two small shields, or like a double shield.

bi-pĕn'-nāte, bi-pĕn-nā'-tĕd, a. [From Latin prefix bi, and pennatus=feathered, winged. Compare also bipennis=having two wings; bi=two, and penna=a feather, a wing.]

1. Zoöl.: Having two wings.

"All bipennated insects have poises joined to the body."—Derham.

*2. Bot.: The same as BIPINNATED (q. v.).

bi-pĕn-nāt'-ĭ-par'-tĕd, a. [From Latin prefix bi=two, and Eng. pennatiparted (q. v.).]

Bot.: Twice pennatiparted, doubly divided into partings or partitions—applied to the venation of a leaf and its lobings. (Lindley: Introd. to Bot.)

bi-pĕn-nāt'-ĭ-sĕc'-tĕd, a. [From Lat. pref. bi=two, and Eng. pennatisected (q. v.).] The same as bipennati-parted, except that the double divisions are into segments instead of into partitions. (Lindley: Introd. to Bot.)

bi-pĕn'-nĭs, s. [Lat. bipennis, as adj.=having two edges; as subst.=an ax with two edges, a battle-ax; from prefix bi, and penna=a feather; another form of pinna=a feather, a wing.] A two-edged ax, a battle-ax.

bi-pĕs, s. [Lat. bipes=two-footed; from prefix bi=two, and pes=foot.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A name given to a lizard from the Cape of Good Hope—the Anguis bipes of Linnæus, the Scelotes bipes of Gray.

2. Zoöl.: A genus of reptiles, belonging to the order Sauria, and the family Gymnophthalmidæ. The hinder legs are imperfect, and thus the first step is taken toward their disappearance in the Ophidia (Serpents), to which these lizards are closely akin. Some species are now transferred to the genus Pygopus (q. v.). Example: Bipes lepidonodus, Lacepède, now Pygopus lepidopodus. It is from Australia.

bōil, bōŷ; pōūt, jōwĭ; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, ðis; sin, aŷ; expect, Xenophon, exĭst. ph = f. -cian, -tian = ŝan. -tion, -sion = ŝŭn; -ñion, -ŝion = zhŭn. -tious, -cious, -sious = ŝŭš. -ble, -dle, &c. = bĕl, dĕl.

bī-pēt'-al-ous, a. [From prefix bi=two, and Lat. petalum=a metal plate. From Gr. petalon=a leaf, a petal, a plate of metal.] [PETAL.]
Bot.: Having two petals in the flower.

bī-phōr'-a, bī-phōr'-ēs, s. pl. [From Lat. prefix bi, and Gr. phērō; the same as Lat. fero=to bear.]

Zool.: An order of Tunicated Molluscs, consisting of free-swimming animals, transparent on glass, and having an aperture at each end of their tubular bodies, the one for the ingress and the other for the exit of water. The typical genus is Salpa. The nearest affinity of the Biphora is with the Ascidians. [ASCIDIA.]

bī-pīn'-nāte, bī-pīn'-nā-tēd, a. [From Lat. prefix bi, and Eng. pinnated. Lat. prefix bi=two, and pinnatus=feathered; pinna=a feather.]

Bot.: The term used when the leaflets of a pinnate leaf are themselves pinnate. A great many of the Acacias, which constitute so marked a feature in tropical jungles, have beautifully bipinnate leaves; so also have their near allies, the Mimosas.

bī-pīn'-nāt'-ī-fīd, bī-pēn'-nāt'-ī-fīd, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two; and Eng. pinnatifid, pennatifid (q. v.).]

Bot.: Twice pinnatifid. The term used when the lobes or sinuations of a pinnatifid leaf are themselves pinnatifid.

Bipinnate Leaf.

bī-plī'-cāte, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and plicatus=folded; pa. par. plico=to fold.]

Bot.: Twice folded together. (Henslow.)

†bī-plīc'-ī-tŷ, s. [From Lat. biplex, genit. biplicis=double, and Eng. suffix -ity.] The state of being twice folded, reduplication. (Roget.)

bī-pō'-lar, a. [From prefix bi=two, and polar (q. v.).] Doubly polar. (Coleridge.)

Bī-pōnt, Bī-pōn'-tine, a. [From Lat. bipontinus=pertaining to Bipontium, now Zweibrücken, in Bavaria.]

Biblio.: Relating to books published at Zweibrücken, or Deux Ponts, as the town was called by the French. (Etym.)

bi-pré-nan, v. t. [A. S. pref. bi, and preon=a clasp, a bodkin.] To pin, to tag. (Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris., 101.) (Stratmann.)

bī-pū'nc-tāte, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and punctatus=punctus=a puncture, with suffix -ate.] [PUNCTATE.]

Entom., &c.: Having two punctures.

bī-pū'nc-tū-al, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and punctus=a puncture, . . . a point, with suffix -al.] [PUNCTURE.] Having two points. (Maunder.)

bī-pū'-pil-lāte, a. [From Lat. prefix bi=two, and pupilla=(1) an orphan girl; (2) the pupil of the eye.]

Entom.: Having two pupil-like markings, differing in color, in the ocellus of a butterfly's wing.

bī-quād'-rāte, s. [In Ger. biquadrat. Lat. prefix bi=two, and quadratus=squared, square; quadro=to make square; quadrum=a square; quatuor=four.] The fourth power of a number or quantity, [BIQUADRATIC.]

"Biquadrate, the fourth power in Algebra, arising from the multiplication of a square number or quantity by itself."—Glossog. Nova.

bī-quād-rāt'-ic, a. & s. [In Fr. biquadratique; Port. biquadrado.] [BIQUADRATE.]

A. As adjective (Arith., Alg., &c.): Twice squared, i. e., squared, and then squared again; raised to the fourth power; containing such a fourth power, or pertaining to that which does so. [See the compound terms which follow.]

B. As substantive (Arith., Alg., &c.): The fourth power; that is, the square multiplied by the square. Thus x^4 is the biquadratic of x , and $a^4 + 4a^3b + 6a^2b^2 + 4ab^3 + b^4$ is the biquadratic of $a + b$.

biquadratic equation. An equation containing the fourth power of the unknown quantity in it, whether with or without the powers less than the fourth. Thus $x^4 + 3x + 4 = 2x^2 - x^3$ is a biquadratic equation.

biquadratic parabola. A curve of the third order, having two infinite legs tending in the same direction.

biquadratic root. The square root of a square root; the square root of a number, and then its square root again extracted. Thus 2 is the biquadratic root of 16, because $\sqrt{16}$ is 4, and $\sqrt{4}$ is 2.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camel, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trŷ, Sŷrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

bi-quash, v. i. [QUASH.] To be rent in pieces. "And al biquashed the roche."—P. Plowman, 12,571.

bī-quē'st, s. [BEQUEST.]

bī-que-then, v. t. [From A. S. be, and cwīthan=to speak or moan in grief, to mourn, to lament.] To bewail.

"And smeren, and winden and biquethen,
And waken is sithen xl nigt."

Story of Genesis and Exodus, 2,448-9.

bī-quīn'-tile, s. [Lat. bi=two, and quintilis=pertaining to the fifth month of the old Roman year, afterward July; quintus=the fifth; quinque=five.]

Astrol.: An aspect of the planets, first noted by Kepler, when their distance from each other is $\frac{2}{3}$ of a circle, i. e., 144°. (Glossog. Nova.)

bī-quua'd, pret. of v. [From pref. bi, and A. S. cwīthan=to say, tell.] [BEQUEATH.] Ordered, appointed.

"God biquaad watres here stede."

Story of Genesis and Exodus, 117.

bir, bur, s. [O. Icel. byrr.] Rage, fury.

"To him he stirt with bir ful grim."

Iwaine and Gawaine, 1,661.

bī-rā'-dī-āte, bī-rā'-dī-ā-tēd, a. [From Lat. bi=two, and radius, pa. par. of radio=to furnish with spokes or rays; radius= . . . a spoke, a ray.] Having two rays.

Ger. bircha, piricha; Russ. bereza; Pol. brzoza; Serv. breza; Lith. berzas; all =birch. Skeat quotes from Benfey Sansc. bharja=a kind of birch, the leaves or bark of which were used for writing on.] [BYRCHE.]

A. As substantive:

1. The English name of the trees and shrubs belonging to the botanical genus Betula (q. v.). The Common Birch (Betula alba) has ovate-deltoid, acute, doubly serrate leaves. Its flowers are in catkins, which come forth in April and May. It grows best in heathy soils and in alpine districts. The Drooping or Weeping Birch (B. pendula) is a variety of this tree. It grows wild on the European continent and in Asia. The wood of the birch is tough and white. It is used for making brooms; it is often burned into charcoal; twigs are by many employed for purposes of castigation. The oil obtained from the white rind is used in tanning Russia leather. [BIRCH-OIL.] The Russians turn it to account also as a vermifuge and as a balsam in the cure of wounds. In some countries the bark of the birch is made into hats and drinking-cups. The Betula nana, or Dwarf Birch, grows in the Highlands of Scotland, in Lapland, &c. It is a small shrub, one or two feet high. The Laplander uses the wood for fuel, and the leaves, spread over with a reindeer's skin, for a bed. B. lenta is the Mahogany Birch, Mountain Mahogany, Sweet Birch, or Cherry Birch of North America. Its leaves are fragrant, and have been used as a substitute for tea. The Canoe Birch, of which the North American Indians construct their portable canoes, is the B. papyracea.

2. A rod of birch used for castigation.

"Why not go to Westminster or Eton at once, man, and take to Lilly's Grammar and Accidence, and to the birch, too, if you like it?"—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. ii.

B. As adjective or in composition: Of or belonging to the tree described under A. (See the compounds which follow.)

† Lady Birch: A name for Betula alba, Lin. [BIRCH.] (Lyte, Prior, &c.)

Silver Birch: Betula alba, Lin. (Lyte, Prior.)

West Indian Birch: A terebinthaceous tree, Bursera gummifera. (Treas. of Botany.)

birch-besprinkled, a. Besprinkled with birch. (Used poetically of cliffs.)

birch-camphor, birch camphor, s. A resinous substance obtained from the bark of the Black Birch (Betula nigra).

birch-oil, s. An oil extracted from the bark of the birch-tree. It is used in the preparation of Russia leather, to which it imparts a certain fragrance, while at the same time protecting it from becoming moldy or being attacked by insects.

birch-wine, birchen-wine, s. Wine made from the vernal juice of the birch.

"She boasts no charms divine, Yet she can carve and make birch-wine."

T. Warton: Progress of Discontent.

† Other obvious compounds with birch as a basic word are: Birch-broom, birch-canoe (Longfellow: Song of Hiawatha, xiii.), birch-grove, birch-leaf (Ibid., iii.), birch-rod, birch-tree, &c.

bīrch, v. t. [From birch, s.] To chastise with a birch rod; to flog.

bīrched, pa. par. & a. [BIRCH, v.]

†bīr'-chen (Eng.), bīr'-ken (Scotch), a. [A. S. beorcen, bircen, byrcen; Dut. berken; Ger. birken.] Pertaining to birch; composed of birch; made of birch. (Gradually becoming obsolete, its place being supplied by the substantive birch used adjectively.) [BIRKEN.]

"She sate beneath the birchen tree."

Scott: The Lady of the Lake, iv. 27.

bīr'-chīn, a. The same as BIRCHEN (q. v.).

bīrch'-īng, pr. par., a., & s. [BIRCH, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & participial adj.: In a sense corresponding to that of the verb.

C. As subst.: The act of chastising with a birch twig.

bīrch'-wood, s. & a. [Eng. birch; wood.]

A. As substantive:

1. A wood consisting of birches.

"Foyers came headlong down through the birchwood with the same leap and the same roar."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

2. The wood of the birch-tree.

B. As adjective:

1. Pertaining to a wood or forest of birch.

"Strewn o'er it thick as the birchwood leaves."

Hemans: Battle of Morgarten.

2. Made of, or in any way pertaining to, the wood of the birch-tree.

bīrch'-wōrts, s. [Eng. birch, and -worts, pl. suff.] [WORT.]

Bot.: The name given by Lindley to his order Betulaceæ (q. v.).

*(a) The young of any feathered flying biped; a chicken.

"As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird, Useth the sparrow . . ."

Shakesp.: Henry IV., v. 1.

*(b) The young of any other animal.

*(c) A child.

"With my brestes my brīd I fed."

Holy Rood (ed. Morris), p. 133.

(2) A feathered flying biped.

(a) Gen.: Any feathered flying biped, great or small, old or young.

" . . . and all the birds of the heavens were fled."—Jeremiah iv. 25.

(b) Spec.: A small feathered flying biped, as distinguished from a large one, the latter being called a fowl. Also especially applied in sporting phraseology to game—e. g., partridges. (Colloquial.)

2. Fig.: As a term of endearment or otherwise.

(1) A lady. Spec., a young lady, a girl, so called probably, not only from her youth [A. 1. (1)], but also from her beauty, her lightness of movement, her ability to sing sweetly, and her liveliness of demeanor. (Chiefly Scotch.)

"Lord John stood in his stable door,

Said he was boun to ride;

Burd Ellen stood in her bower door,

Said she'd rin by his side."

Jamieson: Popular Ballads, i. 117.

(2) An appellation for a man from a woman who loves him. [C. Bird of Arabia.]

(3) An appellation given to a man by one who believes him too soaring in his ambition. [C. Bird of the Mountain.]

II. Technically:

Zool.: The English designation of the Aves, the second class of the sub-kingdom Vertebrata, standing between the Mammalia (Mammals) above, and the Reptilia (Reptiles) below. While in their warm blood they are more closely akin to the former than to the latter, they approach the latter rather than the former in various points of anatomical structure, especially in their lower limbs. [ORNITHOSCELIDA.] They agree also with Reptiles, Amphibia, and Fishes in being oviparous, while the Mammalia bring forth their young alive and suckle them for a time. Birds are feathered bipeds, with wings, used by all but a few aberrant species, for flight. To facilitate this, air cells communicating with the lungs permeate the larger bones, and even the huge bills of the hornbill, toucan, &c., the effect being greatly to diminish their weight. The circulation

Linnaeus divided Birds into six orders, Accipitres, Picæ, Anseres, Grallæ, Gallinæ, and Passeres. All of these, except Picæ, are still retained under different names. Cuvier, in 1817, recognized six orders: Accipitres, Passeres, Scansores, Gallinæ, Grallæ, and Palmipedes. Vigors, in 1825, adopted the quinary arrangement into Raptores, Insesores, Rasores, Grallatores, and Natatores. Owen, in 1866, made seven orders: Natatores, Grallatores, Rasores, Cantatores, Volitores, and Raptores; and Huxley, in 1864, separated Birds into Saurururæ, containing only the Archæopteryx; the Ratitæ, including the Ostrich and its allies; and the Carinatæ, comprehending all ordinary birds. Dallas (following Vogt's arrangement of 1851) divided Birds into two sections, the Autophagi, in which the young birds are capable of feeding themselves from the moment of leaving the egg, and the Insesores, in which the young remain in the nest till they are completely fledged, being fed meanwhile by the parents. The former section contains four orders, the Natatores (Swimmers), the Grallatores (Wading Birds), the Cursores (Runners), and the Rasores (Gallinae ceous Birds). The Insesorial section also contains four orders, the Columbæ (Pigeons), the Scansores (Climbing Birds), the Passeres (Perchers), and the Raptores (Birds of Prey). In A. D. 1711, Ray estimated the birds known and described at "near 500." In 1835, Mr. Swainson conjectured that the species, known and unknown, might be about 6,800.

2. Palæont.: In certain Triassic strata in Connecticut there are "ornithichnites," or fossil footprints like those which birds would leave upon the mud or fine sand over which they walked. [FOOTPRINTS, ORNITHICHNITE.] The number of joints in each of the three toes is precisely the same as in modern birds; notwithstanding which, some think the imprints may be those of Deinosaurian reptiles, of which remains have been found in the same stratum. The oldest bird of which the actual feathered skeleton has been obtained, comes from the lithographic slate of Upper Oolitic age, quarried at Solenhofen in Bavaria; it is the Archæopteryx of Owen (q. v.). Three specimens of it are known at present: one in Bavaria, the second in South Kensington, London, while the third has just been sold to the Berlin University Museum by Herr Haberlein for 80,000 marks, or about £4,000 ($20,000). This last specimen of Archæopteryx has been examined by Professor Carl Vogt, who considers that it is neither bird nor reptile, but something intermediate between the two; or, to be more specific, that while a bird in its integument and hinder limbs, it is a reptile in all the rest of its organization. Bones like those of birds exist in the Wealden; opinion has much wavered as to whether they were true birds or flying reptiles [PTERODACTYL]; there is, however, what appears to be a genuine bird in the Greensand. Professor Marsh found in the cretaceous rocks of this country two remarkable genera of birds: the Hesperornis and the Ichthyornis, the former furnished with true teeth in a groove, and the latter having them lodged in sockets. In these respects they approach reptiles, besides which the Ichthyornis, like reptiles, has its vertebræ concave at each end. Of tertiary birds Owen, in 1846, established four species from the London Clay, described from four or five fragments of bones and skulls found in that Eocene deposit. These include a vulture, a kingfisher, and an ostrich. Bones of birds have been met with somewhat plentifully in the Paris Gypsum and the Lacustrine Limestone of the Limagne d'Auvergne, both fresh-water strata of Eocene age. From the Miocene beds of France have been obtained about seventy species, among others, parrots, trogons, flamingoes, secretary birds, and marabout storks, suggesting the present fauna of South Africa. There are birds in the Miocene of the Sewalik hills in India. Of Post-tertiary species the finest, and also the best known, are the gigantic Moas from New Zealand, which seem to have been contemporary with man, though now they are extinct. The yet more massive Æpiornis, the eggs of which are more than thirteen inches in diameter, and equal in capacity to 148 hens' eggs, is found in surfaco deposits in Madagascar. Thus few fossil birds are known, and those few are mostly from the Tertiary or Post-tertiary rocks.

3. Her.: Birds are regarded, some as emblems of the more active, and others of the contemplative life. Among the terms applied to them are Membered, Armed, and Close (q. v.). When birds are mentioned in blazon, without expressing their species, they should be drawn in the form of the blackbird. (Gloss. of Her.)

B. As adjective.: Of, belonging to, or for a bird. (See the compounds which follow.)

C. In special phrases.

1. A' the birds in the air (Eng.: All the birds in the air): A play among children. (Scotch.)

"A' the birds in the air, and a' the days o' the week, are also common games, as well as the skipping-rope and honey-pots."—Blackwood: Magazine, August, 1821, p. 36. (Jamieson.)

2. Arabian Bird.

(a) Lit.: The fabled Phoenix.

(b) One whose reputation or whose power is so genuine, that, even if destroyed, it will rise again.

"Agr. O Antony! O thou Arabian bird!"

Shakesp.: Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 2.

3. Bird of Ill-omen.: The raven, so called from the fact that its appearance on certain occasions is supposed to be a foreboding of evil.

"'Prophet!' said I, 'thing of evil—prophet still, if bird or devil,'" Poe: The Raven.

4. Bird of Jove.: The eagle.

"I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle."

Shakesp.: Cymbeline, iv. 2.

5. Bird of Juno.

(a) The peacock.

(b) The hawk.

"See the bird of Juno stooping."

Pope: Miscellaneous Poems.

6. Bird of Night.: The owl.

"And yesterday the bird of night did sit Even at noonday, upon the market place,
Hooting and shrieking."

Shakesp.: Julius Cæsar, i. 3.

7. Bird of Peace.: The dove, so called because, on the subsidence of the deluge, it bore to Noah in its bill an olive leaf, the symbol of peace (Gen. viii. 11).

"The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems, Laid richly on her." Shakesp.: Henry VIII., iv. 1.

8. Bird of the Mountain.

(a) Lit.: The eagle.

(b) Fig.: A man of soaring ambition.

"Proud bird of the mountain thy plume shall be torn."

Campbell: Lochiel.

9. Bird of the Wilderness.: The skylark.

"Bird of the wilderness, blythesome and cumberless."
James Hogg: Ode to the Skylark.

10. Birds of a feather; Birds of self-same feather.: Men of similar tastes or proclivities; hence the phrase.

"For both of you are birds of self-same feather."

Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., iii. 3.

11. Birds of a feather flock together.: A prevalent phrase signifying that persons of similar tastes draw together and are generally seen in each other's company—scientists with scientists, religious men with religious men, play-actors with play-actors, thieves with thieves.

bird-bolt, s.

1. Lit.: A short arrow with a broad flat end, used to kill birds without piercing them. (Lit & fig.) It is sometimes represented in heraldry.

2. Fig.: That which smites one's heart or reputation without deeply penetrating either.

"To be generous, guiltless, and of free disposition, is to take those things for bird-bolts that you deem cannon bullets . . ."—Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, i. 5.

"Ignorance should shoot
His gross-knobb'd bird-bolt."

Marston: What You Will.

3. One of the vulgar names for a fish—the Burbot (Molva Lota).

Bird-bolt.

bird-cage, s. A cage for birds. It is generally made with wooden bottom and posts, and with wire; or, if large, sometimes with wicker-work bars on the sides and top.

"At the door he hung the bird-cage."

Longfellow: The Song of Hiawatha, xii.

bird-call, s.

1. A little stick, cleft at one end, on which is put a leaf of some plant, for imitating the cry of birds. (Goodrich & Porter.)

2. A short metallic cylinder, with a circular perforated plate at each end; used to make a trilling noise, as a decoy for birds.

bird-catcher, s. One whose occupation it is to catch birds.

"... and indeed," concluded the critic, "from his fondness for flowers and for birds, I would venture to suggest that a florist or a bird-catcher is a much more suitable calling for him than a poet."—Moore: L. R. (Light of the Haram.)

bird-catching, s. & a.

1. As subst.: The art, operation, or occupation of catching birds.

2. As adj.: Pertaining to the catching of birds; a bird-catching apparatus.

bird-cherry, s. A small tree (the Prunus padus, &c.). It has pendulous racemes of white flowers, which appear in May, and are succeeded by small black drupaceous cherry-like fruits. (Hooker and Arnott.) bird-class, s. A class for teaching birds to imitate the notes of an instrument. There are generally about seven birds in a class. The principle is to shut the class up in a dark room, half-starving the performers till they imitate the instrument, and gradually let in light upon them and partially feed them as a reward for singing. Learning to associate the singing with the gradual appearance of light and the exhibition of food, they sing to obtain these necessities. (Mayhew.) bird-conjurer, *brydd-coniuerer, s. A diviner by means of birds, an augur.

"Thes gentils . . . brydd-conturers and dynynours."
—Wycliffe (Deut. xviii. 14).

bird-diviner, *brid-deuyner, s. The same as BIRD-CONJURER.

"Deunoures and . . . brid-deuyneres." —Wycliffe (Jer. xxvii. 9).

bird-duffer, s. A vulgar name for one who sells a brightly-colored and expensive bird, which is found to be a common one of dull hue painted for sale. The species commonly operated upon is the female greenfinch, its light-colored plumage adapting it for such a purpose. (Mayhew.)

bird-eye, a. [BIRD'S-EYE.]

bird-eyed, a. Having eyes like those of a bird, that is, possessed of piercing sight.

"Slud, 'tis the horse-start out o' the brown study—Rather the bird-ey'd stroke, sir."

Ben Jonson: Cynthia's Revels.

bird-fancier, s. One who fancies birds. (Used either of an amateur, or of one who makes a livelihood by trapping, keeping, and selling birds.)

bird-grass, s. The name given by seedsmen and others to a grass—the Poa trivialis, L.

bird-house, s. An open box for birds, set up on a long pole, to keep it out of the way of cats. It is erected by those who, liking birds, wish to minister to their convenience.

bird-lice, s. pl. The common name given to the small parasites so frequently seen infecting birds. Naturalists place them in the insect order Mallophaga, in immediate proximity to the Anoplura, which contains the human pediculi. [MALLOPHAGA.]

bird-lime, s.

1. Lit.: A substance whitish and limy in appearance. (Used, as its name imports, for capturing birds.) It is in general manufactured from the bark of the holly, though the berries of the mistletoe, and also the bark, boiled in water, beaten in a mortar, and then mashed, may also be employed for the purpose.

"Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make bird-lime of the bark of it."—Bacon: Natural History.

2. Fig.: Anything fitted to ensnare one, or restrain his departure from a place.

"Heav'n's bird-lime wraps me round and glues my wings."
Dryden.

bird-limed, a. Smeared with bird-lime. (Lit. & fig.)

"I love not those 'viscosa beneficia,' those bird-limed kindnesses which Pliny speaks of."—Howell: Letters, i. v. 18.

bird-loops, s. pl. The bars in a bird's cage.

"To keep the inhabitants of the air close captive That were created to sky freedom: surely
The merciless creditor took his first light,
And prisons their first models, from such bird-loops."
Shirley: The Bird in a Cage, iv. 1.

bird-mouthed, s. Mealy-mouthed; not liking to say anything unpleasant, even when it should be done.

"Ye're o'er bird-mouth'd."
Ramsay: S. Prov., p. 86. (Jamieson.)

bird-net, s. A net used for catching birds. It is about twelve yards square, and laid flat on the ground, to which it is affixed by four iron pins, its sides remaining loose. Upon it is put a cage with a decoy-bird in it, given to singing cheerfully. When other birds congregate around it, the man, who has been lying flat on his face twenty or thirty yards off, pulls a string, which makes the loose sides of the net collapse and fly together, imprisoning the birds around the cage. (Mayhew.)

bird-organ, s. A small organ used in teaching birds to sing.

bird-pepper, s. The fruit of a plant, the Capsicum baccatum. When ripe it is gathered, dried in the sun, pounded, and mixed with salt. Afterward it is preserved in bottles with stoppers, and is called Cayenne pepper.

bird-seed, s. A name sometimes given to heads of Plantain, Plantago major (Linn.), and to Canary grass, Phalaris canariensis (Linn.), from their being given to birds for food. (Prior, p. 22.)

bird-spider, s. A genus of spiders—the Mygale, and specially the M. avicularia, a large species inhabiting Surinam, which, as both its English and its scientific names import, was formerly believed to catch birds. [MYGALE.]

†bird-swindler, s. [BIRD-DUFFER.]

bird-trap, s. A two-winged flap-net sprung by hand, or a box-trap supported on a figure-of-four, with a trigger to be touched by the bird, or sprung Ancient Egyptian Bird-trap.

(From "Wilkinson's Ancient Egyptians.")

by a person on watch. The netting of birds by the former method is well pictured in the ancient Egyptian paintings. (Knight.) The trap was generally made of net-work, strained over a frame. It consisted of two semi-circular sides or flaps of equal sizes, one or both moving on the common bar or axis upon which they rested. When the trap was set, the two flaps were kept open by means of strings, probably of catgut, which the moment the bait that stood in the center of the bar was touched, slipped aside, and allowed the two sides to collapse, and thus secured the bird. The Egyptian nets were very similar to those used in bird-catching at the present day, but probably larger, and requiring a greater number of persons to manage, which may be attributed to an imperfection in their contrivance for closing them.

bird-witted, a. Tending to roam from subject to subject; destitute of concentrativeness; without fixity of attention.

bird's-bill, s. A plant (Trigonella ornithorhynchus).

bird's-bread, s. A name for a plant—Sedum acre, which the French call by the corresponding term Pain d'oiseau. It is not known why the name is given.

bird's-eye, bird's-eyes, bird-eye, bird-eeen (Scotch een is=Eng. eyes), s. & a.

A. As substantive:

1. Zoöl. & Ord. Lang. (Lit.): The eye or eyes of a bird.

2. Bot.: The name of several plants with small bright, usually blue, flowers.

(1) A widely-diffused name for Veronica chamædryas.

(2) A name for a plant, called more fully the Bird's-eye Primrose. It is the Primula farinosa. It has pale lilac flowers with a yellow eye. The whole plant is powdered with a substance smelling like musk. It grows in the milder temperate climates of Europe. The American flower bearing the same common name is of a different species, being called by botanists Primula pusilla.

(3) A name sometimes given to the Adonis autumnalis, and indeed to the whole genus Adonis, more commonly designated "Pheasant's eye."

3. Tobacco Trade: A variety of manufactured tobacco, in which the ribs of the leaves are cut along with the fiber.

B. As adjective:

1. Resembling a bird's-eye, as "Bird's-eye primrose" (q. v.).

2. Seen as a landscape might be by a bird flying over a country; i. e., seen from above. A Bird's-eye view (q. v.).

Bird's-eye maple: Acer saccharinum, called also the Sugar-maple. [ACER, SUGAR-MAPLE.]

Bird's-eye primrose: The same as Bird's-eye, A, 2 (2).

Bird's-eye view, Bird-eye view: A view such as must present itself to a bird flying over a country, and consequently looking at the landscape from above. Though a country represented in this way on a map has its prominent features exaggerated, yet to the unimaginative it gives a more lively and even a more correct view of the country than ordinary representations or maps of the normal type could do.

"Viewing from the Pisgah of his pulpit the free, moral, happy, flourishing, and glorious state of France, as in a bird-eye landscape of a promised land."—Burke: On the French Revolution.

"That government being so situated, as to have a large range of prospect, and as it were a bird's-eye view of everything."—Burke: Letter to Thomas Burgh, Esq.

1. In Zoöl. (Lit.): The foot of a bird.

2. In Botany:

(1) The common name of the Ornithopus, a genus of papilionaceous plants, comprising numerous varieties, and of widely extended habitat. O. sativus, or the Serradilla Bird's-foot, a native of Portugal, has proved a most valuable fodder-plant.

(2) A plant—Euphorbia ornithopus. (Treas. of Bot.)

Bird's-foot clover: Withering's name for the Bird's-foot Trefoil (q. v.).

Bird's-foot Trefoil: The English name of the Lotus—a genus of papilionaceous plants, with trifoliate leaves, umbellate flowers, and legumes with a tendency to be divided into many cells. Its home is in the moderate climates of Northern Europe, usually near sea-coasts, or in low-lying meadows. It is easily recognizable by its bright yellow flowers.

bird's-knotgrass, s. A book-name for a plant, Polygonum aviculare (Linn.).

1. Lit.: The month of a bird.

2. Carp.: The notch at the foot of a rafter where it rests upon and against the plate.

bird's-nest, s. & a.

A. As substantive:

I. Lit.: The nest of a bird. Those of the several species vary in their minor details so as to be in most cases quite distinguishable from each other.

¶ Edible bird's-nests are nests built by the Collocalia esculenta, and certain other species of swallows inhabiting Sumatra, Java, China, and some other parts of the East. The nests, which are deemed a luxury by the Chinese, are formed of a mucilaginous substance, secreted by the birds themselves from their salivary glands.

II. Figuratively and technically:

1. Either the popular or book-names of several plants.

†(1) The Wild Carrot, Daucus Carota (Linn.).

"The whole tuft [of flowers] is drawn together when the seed is ripe, resembling a bird's-nest; whereupon it hath been named of some bird's-nest."—Gerard: Herbal, 873.

(2) The Common Parsnip, Pastinaca sativa, L. (Ger. Appendix.)

(3) The modern book-name of the genus Monotropa. (Hooker and Arnott.)

¶ Yellow Bird's-nest: Monotropa hypopitys.

(4) A fern: Asplenium (Thamnopteris) nidus.

¶ Bird's-nest Peziza: The common name for the species of Cyathus and Nidularia, two genera of fungi.

2. Naut.: A look-out station at a mast-head for a seaman sent up thither to watch for whales. [CROW'S-NEST.]

B. As adjective: Resembling a bird's nest; in any way pertaining to a bird's nest. [A., II. (5)]

Bird's-nest Orchis: One of the orchideæ, Neottia or Listera Nidus-avis, L. The English designation is a translation of the Latin Nidus-avis. The plant is so called from having its root composed of numerous fleshy fibers aggregated in a bird's-nest fashion. Gerard indicates the kind of nest which in his view it resembles, saying that it "hath many tangling rootes platted or crossed one over another verie intricately, which resembleth a crow's nest made of stickes." It has dingy brown flowers growing in spikes.

bird-of-freedom, s. Formerly a poetical appellation, but now, by constant and jocose use, a slang name for the American National Symbol—the Eagle.

birds-of-paradise, s. The English designation of a family of Conirostral birds—the Paradisæidæ. They are closely allied to the Corvidæ (crows), with which, indeed, they are united by some writers. They have magnificent plumage, especially the males, who can, moreover, elevate quite a canopy of plumes behind their necks. When first discovered they were the subject of many myths. They were supposed to be perpetually on the wing, having no feet, a fable perpetuated by Linnæus in the name apoda or footless, given to the best-known and finest species. The fact was, that the inhabitants of New Guinea, their native region, cut off the feet before selling them to white men. The fable of the Phoenix is believed to have been framed from myths current about the Birds of Paradise. [PHŒNIX.]

bird's-tare, s. A name given to a plant, genus Arachis.

bird's-tongue, s. A name given to various plants:

1. Stellaria holostea. (Linn.: Ger. Apex.) Britten and Holland consider the name to have been founded on the shape of the leaves.

2. The fruit of the Ash-tree (Fraxinus excelsior), so called from the form thereof being like to a bird's-tongue. (Coles.)

3. A tree, Acer campestre, the common Maple. (Evelyn.)

4. Senecio paradoxus, the Great Fen Ragwort, a composite plant.

5. Anagallis arvensis, the Scarlet Pimpernel.

6. The book-name for a plant genus, Ornithoglossum, belonging to the order Melanthaceæ (Melanths).

¶ Other obvious compounds with bird as a basic word are: Bird-connoisseur (Mayhew: London Labor and the London Poor); bird-lover (Ibid.); bird-note (Hemans: Siege of Valentia); bird-stuffer, bird-stuffing; bird-trade (Mayhew), &c.

The bricht mettell, and vthir armor fere Quharon the son blenkis betis clere."

Douglas: Virgil, 226, 8.

"Gi'e me the blink o' a candle."—Jamieson.

(2) The reflection of light, not necessarily temporary, from the surface of a body.

¶ Blink of the ice. Among Greenland whalers, Arctic navigators, &c.: That dazzling whiteness about the horizon, which is occasioned by the reflection of light from fields of ice. It is now more generally called the ice-blink (q. v.). (Falconer.)

2. Spec.: The act of winking, a wink, or sudden glance of the eye, whether unintentionally or as a signal to some other person.

"The amorous blinks flee to and fro."

Turberville: The Lover Obtaining his Wish.

"But trow ye that Sir Arthur's command could forbid the gibe o' the tongue or the blink o' the e'e, or gar them gie me my food wi' the look o' kindness that gars it digest sae weel . . ."—Scott: Antiquary, ch. xii.

II. Figuratively:

1. Of time:

(1) A very brief period of time, taking only about as long as the twinkling of an eye; a "twinkling."

"For nineteen days and nineteen nights,
Of sun, or moon, or midnight stern
Auld Durie never saw a blink,
The lodging was sae dark and dern."

Minstrelsy of the Border, iii. 116.

(2) A short period, but by no means so brief as that indicated under II. (1).

"A blenk, or blink, a twinkling of fair weather."—Sir J. Sinclair, p. 113.

"Since human life is but a blink, Why should we then its short joys sink."

Ramsay: Poems, ii. 377.

2. Of space: A short distance, a little way, such as may be passed over in a "blink" of time.

"There cam' a fiddler out o' Fife,
A blink beyond Balweary, &c."

Jacobite Relics, i. 21. (Jamieson.)

3. Of mental action or emotion: A spiritual glance.

" . . . soul-refreshing blinks of the Gospel, . . ."

bliss'-fûl, blis'-fûl*, a. [Eng. bliss; -ful.]

1. Of persons:

(1) Full of bliss, as happy as it is conceivable that one could be, or at least very happy.

(2) Causing bliss.

"That bar that blisful barne . . ."

Langl.: Piers Plowman Vision, ii. 3.

2. Of times: During which bliss has been felt.

"So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And steal thyself from life by slow decays?"

Pope.

3. Of places: Characterized by the presence of bliss.

(a) Generally: Characterized by bliss of any kind.

"First in the fields I try the silvan strains, Nor blush to sport in Windsor's blissful plains."

Pope: Pastorals; Spring.

(b) Spec.: Characterized by heavenly bliss.

"But none shall gain the blissful place."

Cowper: Olney Hymns; A Living and a Dead Faith.

4. Of things:

"If Love's sweet music, and his blissful cheer, E'er touch'd your hearts, or mollify'd your ear."

Drayton: The Owl.

¶ Blissful vision: [BEATIFIC VISION.]

"The two saddest ingredients in hell are deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face."—Hammond.

bliss-ful-head*, blÿs-ful-hede*, s. [Eng. bliss-ful; -head.] The state of being in bliss.

"Endeles blÿsfulhede in alle thyng."—Hampole: Pricke of Consc., 7, 836.

bliss'-fûl-lÿ, adv. [Eng. blissful; -ly.] In a blissful manner, very happily, felicitously.

blis'-tër, blis-tre*, s. & a. [From O. Dut. bluisster=blister. In Sw. blåsa=a bladder, a blister, from blasa; Icel. blása=to blow. Skeat considers blister practically a diminutive of the word blast, in the sense of swelling or blowing up. To a certain extent cognate also with Sw. blåddra; Dan. blære; Dut. blaar, all=blister; and with Eng. bladder (q. v.).]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally (Borrowed from the medical and pharmaceutical uses of the word):

(1) A vesication on the human body or on the body of an animal. [II. 1.]

"In this state she gallops, night by night,
O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream,
Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues, Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are."

Shakesp.: Romeo and Juliet, i. 4.

"I found a great blister drawn by the garlic, but had it cut, which run a good deal of water, but filled again by next night."—Temple.

(2) An appliance for producing it. [II. 2.]

2. Fig.: Anything resembling a vesication on a plant, on a painted surface, on iron, or anything else. [II. 3.]

II. Technically:

1. Med.: A vesication produced upon the skin by an external irritating application, or by the friction of something hard. But the special use of the term is for a vesication produced intentionally for medical purposes by the application of a blister-plaster, of which the virtue usually consists in the powdered "Spanish" or Cantharis flies scattered over the surface [2]. When this is first placed upon the skin there arises a sense of tingling and heat, followed by redness and pain, after which the cuticle rises into a vesicle or bladder filled with a watery fluid like the serum of the blood. On the puncturing of the bladder this at once escapes. In a few days the destroyed cuticle has its place supplied by new skin. Such blisters by attracting blood to them tend to withdraw it from morbidly gorged internal organs in a state of inflammation, besides setting up a second morbid action of which the tendency is to counterwork the first, with great relief to the system. [BLEB, PEMPHIGUS, VESICATION.]

2. Pharm.: A vesicatory designed to act upon the skin. It is generally made of the Spanish or blister-fly [BLISTER-FLY] powdered, mixed with lard and wax. It is commonly applied to the skin of the patient for a number of hours.

3. Bot.: A morbid swelling like a vesication in a leaf, produced by the puncture or excavation of insects, or by any other cause.

"Upon the leaves there riseth a tumor like a blister."—Bacon.

¶ A blood-blisters is a sac or bleb filled with a mixture of serum and blood which have exuded into the bleb as the result of a blow or bruise.

B. As adjective: Producing vesications on the skin, as BLISTER-FLY (q. v.).

blister-fly, s. The name for any "fly," using that term in its widest sense to designate any flying insect. The more common blister-flies are beetles, and they are in consequence sometimes called blister-beetles. That most frequently employed by medical men for raising blisters on the skin is the Lytta vesicatoria, formerly called Cantharis vesicatorius. It feeds on the ash. It is indigenous in the South of Europe, and being among other places imported from Spain, is often called the Spanish-fly. [CANTHARIS, LYTTE, SPANISH-FLY.]

blister-plaster, s. A plaster medically prescribed to blister the skin. [BLISTER, II. 2, Pharm.] blister-steel, s.

Iron-working: Steel of blistered appearance formed by roasting bar-iron in contact with carbon in a cementing furnace. Two subsequent processes convert it into shear-steel and cast-steel (q. v.).

blis'-tēr, v. i. & t. [From blister, s. (q. v.)]

A. Intrans.: To rise in vesications.

"If I prove honey-mouth, let my tongue blister,
And never to my red-look'd anger be The trumpet any more."
—Shakesp.: Wint. Tale, ii. 2.

B. Transitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) To raise vesications on the skin, unintentionally, by burning; designedly, for medical purposes; or in any other way.

"I blistered the legs and thighs, but was too late; he died however."—Wiseman.

(2) To raise small swellings like vesications on a plant.

"... that no part of them [graffes] be seen either scorched drie with the sunne, or cicatrized (as it were) and blistered."—Holland: Plinie, bk. xvii., ch. 14.

2. Fig.: To injure, as the reputation, &c.; to annoy, irritate the temper, as a blister acts on the skin.

"Look, here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine,
Who, falling in the flaws of her own youth, Hath blister'd her report."
—Shakesp.: Measure for Measure, ii. 3.

II. Technically:

1. Med. & Pharm.: To produce vesications on the skin by means of a blister-plaster, or in any similar way. [BLISTER, s., A. II.]

2. Bot.: [BLISTERED.] [See also I., 1. (2)]

blis'-tēred, pa. par. & a. [BLISTER, v. t.]

I. Ord. Lang.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

II. Bot.: Having the surface raised, so as to resemble the elevations on the blistered skin of an animal.

Bot. Strawberry Blite: A genus of plants belonging to the order Chenopodiaceæ (Chenopods). The heads of the several species, when ripe, resemble wood-strawberries in color and appearance. They are succulent, and were formerly used by cooks for coloring puddings. Locality, Southern Europe.

bliz'-zard, s. [Ger. blitz=lightning (?).] A storm (snow and wind) which man cannot resist away from shelter, which destroys herds of cattle, blocks railways and generally paralyzes life on the prairies and on the plains; a furious blast that sometimes sweeps across the whole continent, carrying death and destruction in its train.

"Perhaps some of you have seen a blizzard—not one of those amateur disturbances, but a real shrieking, freezing hurricane. If you have, then you will the more readily appreciate one of the several encounters I have had with the disturbances that occasionally ruffle the snowy mantle that for at least five months together covers the prolific soil of Manitoba. Imagine the dangers and discomforts of a lonely horseback ride over an open piece of country, with not a tree between the traveler and the Arctic ocean, while the direct north wind roared ceaselessly and moved northward at the rate of nearly fifty miles an hour, picking up the fine snow and carrying it along in a never-ending blast. Then bear in mind the fact that the temperature was 27 below zero. Not once in ten minutes was it possible for the rider to see even a yard beyond his pony's nose; there was no semblance of a trail, and no visible landmark. For eight hours the struggle continued, and when it ended there was one of the worst cases of all-over frost bite that had ever been known."—Geo. H. Harries, of the Washington, D. C., "Star."

blō, a. [A. S. bleo; N. Fris. bla; O. H. Ger. blao.] Blue, livid, pale. (Story of Genesis and Exodus, 637.)

blo eryl, blo erthe, s. White clay, potter's earth. (Prompt. Parv.) bloached, a. [BLOTCHED.] Spotted, variegated.

"Those leaves whose middles are variegated with yellow or white in spots, are called bloached."—Croker: Compl. Dict.

blōat (1), †blote (1), v. t. & i. [Etym. doubtful. Johnson, Todd, Mahn and others derive it from Eng. blowed, the pa. par. of blow, from which it is supposed by Mahn that it may come by the process blowed, blowt, bloat. Webster suggests for comparison Wel. blyuth (bloth)=a blast, a puff; blythach=a fat paunch. Skeat thinks it rather connected with Icel. blotna=to become soft, to lose courage; blautr=soft, effeminate, imbecile; Dan. blød=soft, pulpy; Sw. blöt=soft, mellow; blöta=to steep, to macerate; from the same root as Lat. fluidus=fluid, moist; Gr. phlyō=to swell, to overthrow.]

A. Transitive:

1. Lit.: To inflate with wind, with watery liquid, with blood, or anything which will make the cheeks or other portion of the human or animal body seem swelled or turgid.

—Addison.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Of persons: To puff up as with unwonted commendation; to render conceited.

"Then damn not, but indulge his rude essays,
Encourage him, and bloat him up with praise,
That he may get more bulk before he dies."
—Dryden: Prologue to Circe.

(2) Of things: To cast a turgidness upon; to swell out upon; to create inflation.

"... where fear's black banner bloats the troubled sky."
—Beattie: Ode to Hope.

(3) A term of contempt for a worthless fellow. [Slang.]

B. Intrans.: To swell; to grow turgid.

"If a person of a firm constitution begins to bloat, from being warm grows cold, his fibers grow weak."—Arbuthnot.

blōat (2), †blote (2), v. t. & i. [Comp. Sw. blöt-fisk=soaked fish; from blöta, v. t.=to steep, to macerate, to sop; blotna, blötna, v. i.=to soften, to melt, to relent; blöt=soft, yielding, pulpy.]

A. Transitive: To cause to dry in smoke.

"I have more smoke in my mouth than would blote a hundred herrings."—Beaumont & Fletcher: Isl. Prin., ii.

¶ It occurs most frequently in the past participle or as a participial adjective. [BLOATED.]

B. Intrans.: To become dry in smoke. [BLOATING (2).]

blōat (1), a. [From bloat (1), v. (q. v.)] Swelled with gluttony, intemperate use of beer, &c.

blōat'-ēd (2), pa. par. & a. [BLOAT (2), v.]

"Three pails of sprats, carried from mart to mart, Are as much meat as these, to more use travel'd,
A bunch of bloated fools!"

Beaumont & Fletcher: Q. of Cor., ii. 4.

blōat'-ēd-nēss, s. [Eng. bloated (1); and suff. -ness.] The quality of being bloated; a swelling of the cheeks, the stomach, &c., from intemperate indulgence in the appetites, from disease, or other causes.

"Lassitude, laziness, bloatedness, and scorbutical spots, are symptoms of weak fibers."—Arbuthnot.

blōat'-ēr, s. [From blote (2), v. (q. v.), and suff. -er.] [BLOTE.] A dried herring; a herring prepared by being cured in smoke. Yarmouth is often prefixed to the word bloater, that seaport being the greatest seat of this industry in England. North Carolinian herrings furnish the best bloaters that are put up in this country.

blōat'-īng (1), pr. par. & a. [BLOAT (1), v.]

blōat'-īng (2), pr. par. & s. [BLOAT (2), v.]

As subst.: The act of curing herrings.

"For herrings in the sea are large and full,
But shrink in bloating, and together pull."

Sylvester: Tobacco Batt., p. 101.

blōb, blāb, s. [BLEB.] (Chiefly Scotch.)

1. Anything tumid. Spec.—

(1) A small globe or bubble of any kind, as a soap bubble.

"Gif thay be handillit, they melt away like ane blob of water."—Bellend.: Descr. Alb., ch. 11.

(2) A blister, or that rising of the skin which is the effect of a blister or of a stroke.

"Brukis, bylis, blobbis, and blisteris."

Roul.: Curs. Gl. Compl., p. 330.

(3) A plant, the Marsh Marigold (Caltha palustris), or the Yellow Water-lily.

(4) A large gooseberry; so called from its globular form, or from the softness of its skin.

"There swimmeth also in the sea a round slimy substance, called a blobber."—Carew.

lobber-lip, llobberlip, s. Having a thick, blubbery lip.

"They make a wit of their insipid friend,
His llobberlips and beetlebrows commend."

Dryden: Juvenal, sat. iii.

lobber-lipped, llobberlipped, a. Having tumid lips; thick-lipped. Used—

1. Of man or the higher animals.

"His person deformed to the highest degree; flatnosed and llobber-lipped."—L'Estrange.

2. Of shells.

"A llobberlipped shell seemeth to be a kind of mussel."—Grew.

blōb'-bīt, particip. a. [From blob, s. (q. v.)] Blotted; blurred.

"... congruit and not rasi [erased], na blobbit of suspect placis."—Acts James I., 1429, c. 128, edit. 1566, c. 113. (Jamieson.)

blōb'-tāle, s. [From blob, a corruption of blab, v., and Eng. tale.] A tell-tale; a blab.

"These blobtales could find no other news to keep their tongues in motion."—Ep. Hackett: Life of Abp. Williams, pt. ii., p. 67.

blo'-bure, blo-byr, s. [BLOBBER.]

blōc, s. [Fr. bloc=a block, lump, . . .] [BLOCK, s.] ¶ En bloc. [Fr.] In lump, altogether, in mass; without separating one from another.

blōck, blok (Eng.), block, blocke, blok, bloik (Scotch), s. & a. [In Sw. & Ger. block; O. H. Ger. block; Dan. & Dut. blok; Icel. blegðhr; Flem. bloc; Pol. kloc; Russ. plakha; Wel. ploc, plocian, plocyn, plocynan=a block, a plug; Gael. pluc=a lump, a bump, a jumble of a sea; ploc=any round mass, a junk of a stick, a potato-masher, a large clod, a very large head; Ir. ploc=a plug, a bung. Cognate with break and plug (q. v.)]

A. As substantive:

1. Ordinary Language:

Literally:

(1) Gen.: A massive body with an extended surface, whether in its natural state or artificially smoothed on one or more sides.

"... violently career'd round into our own placid watery vista a huge charging block of waters."—De Quincey: Works, 2d ed., i. 103.

(2) Spec.: A thick piece of timber, iron, or other material more or less shaped by art; as—

(a) The massive piece of wood on which state criminals when doomed to death are beheaded.

"Slave! to the block!—or I, or they, Shall face the judgment-seat this day!"

Scott: Rokeby, vi. 31.

(b) Squared timber, as for shipbuilding.

"Thus," said he, "will we build this ship;
Lay square the blocks upon the slip."

Longfellow: The Building of the Ship.

(3) In the same sense as II. 1 (q. v.).

"Though the block is occasionally lowered for the inspection of the curious, the birds have not forsaken the nest."—Cowper: A Tale, June, 1793.

(4) The wooden mold on which a hat is formed, or by metonymy the hat itself. [II., 5.]

"He wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat; it ever changes with the next block."—Shakesp.: Much Ado About Nothing, i. 1.

(5) A row of buildings connected together without the interruption of streets, open spaces, or semi-detached edifices. This term, which is purely American, has become naturalized in England of late.

"The new warehouses of the Pantechnicon, Belgrave Square, erected in detached blocks, are ready for storing furniture, . . ."—London Times, September 7, 1876. (Advt.)

2. Figuratively:

(1) Of things: An obstruction, a hindrance, an impediment, or its effects; as a block on the railway, in the streets, in one of the shafts of a coal-pit, &c.

"... therefore infirmity must not be a block to our entertainment."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. ii.

(2) Of persons:

(a) A stupid person.

"What tongueless blocks were they! would they not speak?"

Shakesp.: Richard III., iii. 7.

(b) An obstinate person, one impossible to move.

"All considerations united now in urging me to waste no more of either rhetoric, tallow, or logic, upon my impassive granite block of a guardian."—De Quincey: Works (2d ed.), p. 67.

II. Technically:

1. Mech.: A pulley, or a system of pulleys rotating on a pintle mounted in its frame or shell with its band and strap. The pin or pintle of a block of pulleys is the axis or axle. It passes through the bushing of the shell and the coak of the sheave, and is generally of iron. The sheave or wheel is generally of lignum-vitæ or of iron, and has around its circumference a groove for the rope, called the gorge. It has a bushing, called a coak, around the pintle-hole. The space between the sheave and its block, through which the rope runs, is called the swallow or channel. It answers to the throat of some other machines; the pass in a rolling-mill. The shell, pulley-frame, or body of the block is made of a tough wood, or sometimes of iron; it has one or two grooves, called scores, cut on each end to retain the strap which goes around it. The shell is hollow inside to receive the sheave or sheaves, and has a hole through its center to receive the sheave-pin, called the pintle; this is lined with bronze or gun-metal, called a bushing or bushing. When the shell is made of one piece, it is called a mortise-block; when more than one are employed, it is termed a made block. The side plates of the shell are cheeks. The strap, strop, iron-binding, grommet or cringle, is a loop of iron or rope, encircling the block, and affords the means of fastening it in its place. The hook of iron-strapped blocks is frequently made to work in a swivel, so that the several parts of the rope forming the tackle may not become "foul" or twisted around each other. (Knight.)

There are many kinds of blocks, as a pulley-block, a fiddle-block, a fish-block, a fly-block, a heart-block, a hook-block, &c. (See these words.)

¶ Block and tackle: The block and the rope rove through it, for hoisting or obtaining a purchase. [TACKLE.]

2. Sawyers' work: One of the frames on which an end of a log rests in a saw-mill.

3. Carp.: A square piece of wood fitted in the re-entering angle formed by the meeting edges of two pieces of board. The blocks are glued at the rear and strengthen the joint. (Knight.)

Blocks.

4. Wood-cutting: A form made of hard wood, on which figures are cut in relief by means of knives, chisels, &c.

5. Hat-making: A cylinder of wood over which a hat or bonnet is shaped in the process of manufacture.

6. Saddlery: A former or block on which a piece of wet leather is molded by hammering or pressing.

7. Military:

(a) Short pieces of scantling, used for elevating cannon and supporting them in position a short distance from the ground, or in assisting in their transfer from higher to lower levels, and vice versa. These are designated as whole, half, and quarter blocks, and have a uniform length of twenty and width of eight inches, their respective thickness being eight, four, and two inches. (Knight.)

(b) The term is used also as part of the compound gin-blocks (q. v.).

8. Falconry: The perch on which a bird of prey is kept.

9. Cricket: The spot where the striker places his bat to guard his wicket; also called blockhole. [GUARD.]

10. Hairdressing: A barber's block=a stand for a wig.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to or resembling a short, thick, lump of wood or other material. (See the compounds which follow.)

Printing: A book printed not from movable types, but from engraved blocks, each one forming a page. Block-printing had long been known [BLOCK-PRINTING] before the art was used in the preparation of books. In 1438 Laurenza John Koster of Haarlem published his Speculum Humanæ Salvationis with blocks; the Biblia Pauperum, published early in the fifteenth century, was also a block-book. About 1450 movable types began to be used, and block-books were superseded. [PRINTING.]

block-brush, s. [So named because used by butchers to clean their blocks.]

Her.: A bunch of the plant called Butcher's Broom (Ruscus aculeatus). It is in England borne by butchers as the insignia of their company.

Printing: Type of large size cut out of wooden blocks. Block-letters, or wooden type, are generally made of cherry or boxwood, cut endwise. They are made of sizes from two or three-line pica up to 150-line pica, more than two feet in length.

block-letter cutting-machine, s. A machine for cutting block-letters. (For various forms of them see Knight's Practical Dictionary of Mechanics.)

Mech.: Machinery for cutting, shaping and adjusting "blocks" to be associated with "tackles" in the navy and in merchant vessels. The machines used for dressing the shells of the blocks are (1) a reciprocating cross saw, (2) a circular cross-cut saw, (3) a reciprocating ripping saw, (4) a boring-machine, (5) a mortising-machine, (6) a corner-saw, (7) a shaping-machine, and (8) a scoring-machine. A reciprocating, a circular, and a crown saw are used for rounding the sheaves and boring the center hole. There are, besides, a coating-machine, a drilling-machine, a riveting-machine, and a facing-lathe.

Printing: The art or process of printing from blocks instead of from movable types. It is supposed to have been invented by the Chinese about A. D. 593. It has been long employed in calico-printing in that country, as well as in India, Arabia, and Egypt. In Europe the same process was adopted for printing playing-cards, and during the first half of the fifteenth century books were produced by means of block-printing; they were hence called block-books. [BLOCK-BOOK.] Now block-printing is used for printing cotton cloth or paper for hangings. Two stages of progress in the method are to be traced. First the pattern was daubed upon the color and impressed by hand upon the material, which lay upon a table before the workman. When the pattern was in several colors, different blocks of the same size were employed, the raised pattern in each being adapted for its special portion of the design. The exact correspondence of each part, as to position, was secured by pins on the blocks, which pierced small holes in the material and indicated the exact position. Next, an improved system by Perrot was introduced, in which the calico passed between a square prism and three engraved blocks, brought in apposition to three faces of the prism, and delivered their separate impressions thereupon in succession. Each block was inked after each impression, and the cloth was drawn through by a winding cylinder. The blocks were pressed against the cloth by springs. Perrot's system did twenty times as much work in an hour as that which it all but displaced. Now block-printing has been superseded by cylinder or roller-printing, which works twenty times as fast as even Perrot's method. (Knight.)

block-system, block system, s.

Railway Traveling: A method of signaling specially designed to prevent collisions between trains traveling on the same line of rails. The route to be traversed is divided into small sections by telegraph boxes erected at intervals. Let A D in the figure be a portion of such a line with signal boxes at A, B, C and D. Let A t' B t' C D t' and t' be two trains —> —> both moving in the direction of the arrows. If t' overtake t there will be a collision, but the block-system prevents this by setting the danger signal at B against the train t' till t has passed C. Then the danger-signal is set at C against train t' till t has passed D, and so in succession. Thus the two trains are never for a moment in the same section of the railway, and cannot therefore come into collision. The advantages derived from the adoption of this system are universally admitted, yet comparatively few of our railways have the system in use.

block-teeth, s.

Dentistry: Two or more teeth made in a block carved by hand from ivory, whale's or walrus' teeth, &c.

block-tin, s. [Eng. block, and tin. In Sw. blocktinn; Dut. bloktin; Ger. blockzinn.]

Comm.: A name given to an impure tin cast into ingots. When the metal is allowed to cool gradually the upper part is the purest, the impurities being contained in the lower part. Block-tin contains iron, arsenic, lead, &c. [Tin.]

block-wire, s. In the railway block-system, a wire connecting adjacent block-signal towers or semaphore poles.

block-wood, blockwood, s. An unknown wood, presumably suitable for being carved into blocks.

"Blockwood, logwood and other forbidden materials, . . ."—Golden Fleece (1657). (Hallinell: Cont. to Lexicog.) block, v. t. [From Eng. block, s. (q. v.) In Sw. blockera, blockera; Dan. blokere=to block up; Dut. blokkeeren; Ger. blokieren; Fr. bloquer; Sp. & Port. bloquear; Ital. bloccare.]

1. Literally:

(1) To shut up so as to hinder egress or ingress; to obstruct. (Dryden: Spanish Friar, v. 1.) (Often followed by up.)

(2) Eng. Parl. Law: To block a bill in Parliament is to give notice of opposition and so to bring it within the operation of the Standing Order, which, subject to certain exceptions, provides that "no order of the day or notice of motion be taken after half-past twelve at night, with respect to which order or notice of motion a notice of opposition shall have been printed on the notice paper."

¶ In cricket: To stop a ball dead without attempting to hit it.

2. Figuratively:

(1) To plan, to devise. (Scotch.) [¶ (2).] "The committee appointed for the first blocking of all our writs."—Baillie: Letters, i. 75.

(2) To bargain. (Scotch.)

¶ (1) To block in:
Art: To get in the broad masses of a picture or drawing.

(2) To block out: Roughly to mark out work afterward to be done.

(3) Blocked up: Print.: This phrase signifies that the font of type is all set, and none is available for present use.

blöc-kāde, s. [From Eng. block; and suff. -ade. In Sw. blockad; Dan. blockade; Dut. blokkade; Ger. blockade; Fr. blocus (a contraction, according to Littré, of Ger. blockhaus; O. Ger. block-hūs)=a blockade; Sp. bloqueo; Port. bloqueio; Ital. blocatura.]

I. Mil., Navt. & Ord. Language:

1. Gen.: The act of surrounding a town with a hostile army, or, if it be on the sea-coast, of placing a hostile army around its landward side, and ships of war in front of its sea defenses, so as, if possible, to prevent supplies of food and ammunition from entering it by land or water. The object of such an investment is to compel a place too strong or too well defended to be at once captured by assault, to surrender on account of famine.

"It seemed that the siege must be turned into a blockade."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xii.

¶ Almost every siege involves a blockade, but in a siege, properly so called, military approaches are pushed on against the place with the view of ultimately capturing it by assault, whereas in a blockade no assault is contemplated. Most of the sieges of antiquity were only blockades.

2. Spec.: The investment of a place by sea, to prevent any ships from entering or leaving its harbor. The practice seems to have been introduced by the Dutch about A. D. 1584.

¶ (1) To break a blockade: Forcibly to enter a blockaded port, if not even to compel the naval force investing it to withdraw.

(2) To raise a blockade:

(a) To desist from blockading a place.

(b) To compel the investing force to do so.

(3) To run a blockade: Surreptitiously to enter or leave a blockaded port at the risk of being captured.

II. International Maritime Law: As a blockade seriously interferes with the ordinary commercial right of trading with every place, international law carefully limits its operation, the principle adopted being this: that belligerents are not entitled to do anything likely to incommode neutrals more than it benefits themselves. Neutrals are therefore entitled to disregard a blockade except it be effective, that is, unless the town be invested by a fleet sufficient to prevent the ingress and the exit of vessels. When on November 21, 1806, the Berlin decree of Napoleon I. declared the whole British Islands in a state of blockade, that blockade, being ludicrously ineffective, was illegal; so also, though to a somewhat less extent, were the British orders in council of November 11 and 21, 1807, which placed France and all its tributary states in a state of blockade. The retaliatory Napoleonic Milan decree of December 27, 1807, extending the previously announced blockade to the British dominions in all quarters, labored to a still greater extent under the same defect. More effective, as being more limited in area, were the blockades of the Elbe by Britain in 1803, that of the Baltic by Denmark in 1848-9 and 1864, and that of the ports of the Confederate States of America by President Lincoln on April 19, 1861. A blockade should be formally notified before it is enforced, permission being granted to neutral vessels then to depart, carrying with them any cargo which they may already have on board; when it terminates, its cessation should also be formally declared. Any one running a blockade does so at his own peril; one's own government cannot by international law protect him from forfeiting his vessel with its cargo and his liberty, if he be captured by the blockading fleet.

1. Of things: A vessel used for the purpose of trading by sea with a blockaded town.

¶ 2. Of persons: A man engaged in trading by sea with a blockaded town.

blockade-running, s. The act or occupation of trading by sea with a blockaded town. During our Civil War (1861-1865) many of the British engaged in blockade-running, attempting to enter Charleston, Wilmington, and other harbors of the Confederate States.

blöc-kā'de, v. t. [From blockade, s. (q. v.) See also BLOCK, v.]

1. Ord. Lang., Military, &c.: To surround a town with troops, or, if it be a seaport, to surround its landward portion with troops, and place ships of war in front of its harbor, so as to cut off all supplies from the garrison and inhabitants till they surrender the place.

" . . . the approaches were closed, and the town effectually blockaded."—Froude: Hist. Eng. (1858), vol. iv., 437.

2. Fig.: To obstruct the passage to anything. Sometimes ludicrously.

"Huge bales of British cloth blockaded the door,

A hundred oxen at your levee roar."

Pope: Mor. Essays, iii. 57.

blöcked, pa. par. & a. [BLOCK.]

blöck-ēr, *blöck-ēr, s. [Eng. block; -er.]

1. One who hinders the progress of anything, an obstructor; specif., one who blocks a parliamentary bill.

2. One who plans or accomplishes a bargain; a broker. (Scotch.)

"Oure souverane Lord, &c., vnderstanding of the fraude and frequent abuse committed by many of his Maesties subiectis, byeris and blokeris of victuell."—Acts James VI., 1621 (ed. 1814), p. 614. (Jamieson.)

blöck-hēad, s. [Eng. blockhead; head.] A person, with a good deal of exaggeration, said to be as destitute of understanding as if his skull inclosed a block of wood in place of hemispheres of brain; a dolt, a fool, an ass, a stupid person.

"The Christian hope is—Waiter, draw the cork—

If I mistake not—Blockhead! with a fork!"

Cowper: Hope.

blöck-hēad-ēd, a. [Eng. blockhead; -ed.] Having such a mind as is possessed by a blockhead; stupid, dull.

"Says a blockheaded boy, these are villainous creatures."—L'Estrange.

blöck-hēad-ism, s. [Eng. blockhead; -ism.] The procedure or characteristics of a blockhead.

" . . . though now reduced to that state of blockheadism."—Smart: Notes to the Hilliad.

blöck-hēad-lŷ, a. [Eng. blockhead; -ly.] Like a blockhead.

"Some mere elder-brother, or some blockheadly hero."—Dryden: Amphitryon.

blöck-hōuse, †blöck-hāus, s. [Eng. block= . . . a thick, heavy mass of wood, and house. In Sw. blockhus; Dan. blockhuus; Dut. blokhuis; Ger. & Fr. blockhaus.]

Fortif. & Ord. Lang.: A small fort built of heavy timber or logs, and with the sides loop-holed for mnsketry, or if it be sufficiently large and strong, with ports or embrasures for cannon. It may be built square, rectangular, polygonal, or in the form of a cross. If more than one story high the upper story may project over the lower so as to obtain a fire directly downward. It is generally surrounded by a ditch, and sometimes has earth on its roof that it may be more difficult to set it on fire.

Blockhouses of galvanized iron were used by the British in their war with the Boers (1899-1902). The walls were constructed of sheets of the iron placed four inches apart, with the intervening spaces filled with gravel. They were generally octagonal in shape, with two loopholes upon each face. A network of barbed wire extended from the loopholes to from fifteen to twenty yards out, making an impassable chevaux-de-frise. These, in connection with a system of armored trains (q. v.) patrolling between them, contributed greatly to the success of the British.

blöck-in-cōurse, s. & a. [Eng. block; in; course.] A term used only in the subjoined compound.

block-in-course masonry, s.

Masonry: A kind of masonry which differs from ashlar masonry chiefly in being built of smaller stones. The usual depth of a course is from seven to nine inches.

blöck-īng, pr. par., a. & s. [BLOCK, v.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As substantive:

1. Ordinary Language: The act of shutting up or obstructing; the state of being shut up or obstructed; obstruction. [BLOCK, v. ¶ 2.]

" . . . by blocking of trade . . ."—Clarendon.

II. Technically:

1. Leather-working: The process of bending leather for boot-fronts to the required shape. [CRIMPING.]

2. Bookbinding: The art of impressing a pattern on a book-cover by a plate or association of tools under pressure. It is called blind or gold blocking. In the latter case gold-leaf is used; in the former, the bare block.

3. Carpentry: A mode of securing together the vertical angles of wood-work. Blocks of wood are glued in the inside angle.

blocking-course, s.

Architecture: The upper course of stones or brick above a cornice or on the top of a wall.

blocking-down, s.

Metallurgy: The art of adjusting sheet-metal to a mold or shape. This is done by laying above it a thick piece of lead, and striking the latter by a mallet or hammer. This mode is sometimes adopted to bring a plate partially to shape before swaging it between the dies.

blocking-kettle, s.

Hat-making: A hot bath in which hats are softened in the process of manufacture, so as to be drawn over blocks. (Knight.)

blocking-press, s.

Bookbinding: A bookbinder's screw-press in which blocking is performed. It has less power than the embossing-press, which operates with large dies, being used for ornamentation, requiring but a comparatively small pressure.

(Bosworth, Skeat, &c.)] [BLOW (2), v.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally: The fluid circulating by means of veins and arteries through the bodies of man and of the lower animals. [II. 1.]

"For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar."—Leviticus xvii. 11.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Lineage, descent, progeny.

(a) Of things: Lineage, descent; specially royal or noble descent, high extraction.

"O! what an happiness is it to find

A friend of our own blood, a brother kind!"

Waller.

¶ Formerly it might in this sense have a plural.

"As many and as well-born bloods as those, Stand in his face to contradict his claim."

Shakesp.: King John, ii. 1.

†(b) Of persons: Child, progeny. (In this sense generally combined with flesh.)

"But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter."

Shakesp.: King Lear, ii. 4.

¶ A half-blood: A half-breed.

(2) Temper, passions; or one in whom these are prominent.

(a) Of things: Temper, passions.

"The Puritan blood was now thoroughly up."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

(b) Of persons: A person of hot temper; a man (in most cases young) of fiery character; one brave, but unrestrained by prudence or perhaps even by moral principle, and from whom in consequence violence may in times of excitement be expected.

"The news put divers young bloods into such a fury as the ambassadors were not without peril to be outraged."

—Bacon.

(3) Life; the vital principle, especially with reference to the taking away of life. Hence closely allied to (4).

"Shall I not therefore now require his blood of your hands?"—2 Samuel iv. 11.

(4) The shedding of blood or its consequences.

(a) The shedding of blood; the taking of life away, especially in an unlawful manner; murder.

"Blood follows blood, and through their mortal span,
In bloodier acts conclude those who with blood began."

Byron: Child Harold, ii. 63.

(b) The atoning death of Christ.

"... the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John i. 7.

(c) The responsibility of shedding blood, sacrificing a life, or the soul.

"Your blood be upon your own heads . . ."—Acts xviii. 6.

¶ The price of blood: Reward or retribution for shedding it, or for taking a life.

"It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood."—Matthew xxvii. 6.

(5) Any liquid resembling blood in color, or in some other obvious character. (Used especially of the juice of a fruit, as the grape.)

"... and thou didst drink the pure blood of the grape."—Deut. xxxii. 14.

¶ With some similitude to this, the wine in the communion is the sacramental symbol of the blood of Christ.

"And He said unto them, This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many."—Mark xiv. 24.

3. In special phrases, the word blood having the same signification:

(1) As in A. I. 1.

Flesh and blood: Human nature. [FLESH.]

"... for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."—Matthew xvi. 17.

(2) As in A. I. 2 (a).

(a) A prince of the blood: A prince of royal extraction, not one raised to the dignity of prince by law or mandate.

"They will almost
Give us a prince o' th' blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him."

Shakesp.: Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3.

(b) The blood-royal: Royal descent.

(3) As in A. I. 2 (2).

(a) Bad blood: A feeling of animosity toward one.

(b) In cold blood: With the passions unexcited, coolly, and therefore, presumably, with more or less deliberation.

"Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?"

Shakesp.: Timon, iii. 5.

(c) In hot blood: With the passions excited.

"Upon a friend of mine; who, in hot blood, Hath stepp'd into the law . . ."

Shakesp.: Timon, iii. 5.

(d) In blood: In a state of perfect health and vigor; properly a term of the chase.

"But when they shall see, sir, . . . the man in blood, they will out of their burrows like conies after rain."—Shakesp.

(4) As in A. I. 2 (3).

For his blood*: Though his life depended upon it. (Vulgar.)

"A crow lay battering upon a muscle, and could not, for his blood, break the shell to come at the fish."—L'Estrange.

II. Technically:

1. Physiol.: The red circulating fluid in the bodies of man and the higher animals. It is formed from chyle and lymph when these substances are subjected to the action of oxygen taken into the lungs by the process of inspiration. It is the general material from which all the secretions are derived, besides which it carries away from the frame whatever is noxious or superfluous. In man its temperature rarely varies from 36° 6' C=98° F., but in birds it sometimes reaches 42° 8' C=109° F. The blood in reptiles, amphibians, and fishes, and the circulating fluid in the invertebrata, is cold, that is, in no case more than a little above the temperature of the surrounding medium. The vessels which conduct the blood out from the heart are called arteries, and those which bring it back again veins. The blood in the left side of the heart and in the arteries, called arterial blood, is bright red; that in the right side of the heart and in the veins, called venous blood, is blackish-purple. Viewed by spectrum analysis, the hæmoglobin of arterial blood differs from that of venous blood, the former being combined with oxygen, and the latter being deoxygenized. The density of blood is 1.003 to 1.057. Its composition in 1,000 parts is as follows:

Water.....	780.15	to	785.58
Fibrine.....	2.10	"	3.57

Blood has a saline and disagreeable taste, and, when fresh, a peculiar smell. It has an alkaline re-action. It is not, as it appears, homogeneous, but under a powerful microscope is seen to be a colorless fluid with little round red bodies called blood-discs or blood-corpuscles, and a few larger ones called white-corpuscles floating about in it. [BLOOD-DISC, CORPUSCLE.] When removed from the body and allowed to stagnate it separates into a thicker portion called crutor, crassamentum, or clot, and a thinner one denominated serum. [See these words.]

"The blood is the immediate pabulum of the tissues; its composition is nearly or entirely identical with them; it is, indeed, as Borden long ago expressed it, liquid flesh."

Todd & Bowman: Physiol. Anat., i. 43.

2. Law:

(1) Whole blood is descent not simply from the same ancestor, but from the same pair of ancestors, while half-blood is descent only from the one. Thus böil, böy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, ðhis; sin, a; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f.

-cian, -tian = shan. -tion, -sion = shün; -tion, -sion = zhün. -tious, -cious, -sious = shüs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bel, del.

in a family two brothers who have the same father and mother stand to each other in the relation of whole blood, but if the mother die, and the father marry again and have children, these stand to the offspring of the first marriage only in the relation of half-blood. (Blackstone: Comment., bk. ii., ch. xiv.)

(2) Corruption of blood is the judicial stripping it of the right to carry with it up or down the advantage of inheritance [ATTAINDER]; its purification or restitution is the restoration to it of the privilege of inheritance. (Ibid., ch. xv., bk. iv., ch. 29, 31.)

B. As adjective: Of lineage or pure breed, and presumably of high spirit or mettle.

"... a pair of blood horses."—London Times, September 8, 1876.

blood-baptism, s.

Theol. & Ch. Hist.: Baptism by means of blood, i. e., by martyrdom. If any one who had not been baptized showed his firm faith in Christianity by dying a martyr's death rather than renounce it, the early Christians regarded him as if he had been baptized, his death being held to be the equivalent of baptism. (Coleman.)

blood-besprinkled, a. Besprinkled with blood.

†blood-boltered, a. [Eng. blood, and bolter=a sieve for separating bran from flour, or coarse from fine meal.] Sprinkled with blood, as from a sieve or bolter; having the hair clotted with blood.

"The blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles upon me."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, iv. 1.

blood-bought, a. Bought with blood; achieved through the sacrifice of life.

"Incomparable gem! thy worth untold; Cheap, though blood-bought, and thrown away when sold."
Cowper: Table Talk.

blood-brother, s. A brother by blood, as distinguished from a brother-in-law, brought into that relation by marriage.

blood-cemented, a.

†1. Lit.: Cemented by blood.

2. Fig.: Cemented together in political or other feeling by being of one blood, or by having shed their blood in a common enterprise.

"(Educating good from ill) the battle groan'd, Ere, blood-cemented, Anglo-Saxons, saw."
Thomson: Liberty, pt. iv.

blood-color, s.

Her.: Sanguine. It is distinguished from bloody, Her. (q. v.)

blood-colored, a.

1. Colored by means of blood.
2. Of the color of blood.

"O nation miserable!

With an untitled tyrant, bloody-scepter'd,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?"

Shakesp.: Macbeth, iv. 3.

bloody-shirt, s. A political phrase used with great animosity and more or less frequently in the political discussions of the reconstruction period following our late civil war. It arose from the alleged reports made in Congress by Republican members of the finding in localities in the South of shirts stained with blood—such findings being offered as proof that some negro had been murdered by the lawless whites in that section of the Union. Hence, when a person was endeavoring to stir up political and social animosity against the South, he was characterized as "waving the bloody-shirt."

bloody-sweat, bloody sweat, s. A popular name for a disease called by medical men diapedesis, which is transudation of blood through the pores of the vessels. Several instances of it are said to have occurred in the Middle Ages, the causes being, on the one hand, excessive terror of death or outrage, with extreme bodily debility; or on the other, violent anger, joy, or other exciting emotion. No well authenticated modern instance of the disease has been recorded. [DIAPEDESIS.] (Stroud: Physical Cause of the Death of Christ; Smith: Dict. of the Bible, &c.)

"By thine agony and bloody sweat."—Litany.

S. blowan=to blow, bloom, blossom, or flourish [Blow (2)]. Not the same as blawan=to blow or breathe, as the wind does.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

*(1) A flower.

"Man his daies ere als hai

Als blome of felde sal he welyn awai."

Metr. Eng. Psalter, Psalm cii. 15.

(2) A delicate blossom, or a blossom in general.

¶ Bloom, as Trench justly remarks, is a more delicate inflorescence even than blossom; thus we speak of the bloom of the cheek, but not of its blossom.

"The blemis blywest of blee fro the sone blent."

Houlate, i. l. MS.

"Haste to yonder woodbine bow'rs;

The turf with rural dainties shall be crown'd,
While opening blooms diffuse their sweets around."

Pope: Spring, 100.

(3) The very delicate blue color upon newly-gathered plums and grapes, beautiful as that of a blossom, but yet more fleeting.

(4) The similar bloom on a cucumber.

2. Fig.: The state of immaturity in man's youth, or in anything susceptible of growth and development.

"'Tis not on youth's smooth cheek the blush alone, which fades so fast,

But the tender bloom of heart is gone, ere youth itself be past."

Byron: Stanzas for Music.

"... to a date within the florescence, or bloom, of the Egyptian Empire."—Gladstone: Homeric Synchronism, pt. ii., ch. i., p. 165.

II. Leather Manufacture: A yellowish, powdery coating on the surface of well-tanned leather. It may consist of a deposit of surplus tannin.

bloom-fell, fell-bloom, and fell bloom, s. The Bird's-foot Trefoil, Lotus corniculatus. (Scotch.)

"Ling, deer-hair, and bloom-fell, are also scarce, as they require a loose spongy soil for their nourishment."—Prize Ess. Highl. Soc. Scot., iii. 524. (Jamieson.)

blōm (2), s. [A. S. bloma=metal, a mass, a lump.]

Metallurgy:

*1. Originally: A cubical mass of iron about two feet long.

"Bloom in the iron-works is a four-square mass of iron about two foot long."—Glossog. Nova.

2. Next (plur.): Malleable iron after having received two beatings, with an intermediate scouring.

"The blooms are heated in a chafery or hollow fire, and then drawn out into bars for various uses."—Agr. Surv. Stirl., p. 348. (Jamieson.)

3. Now: A loop or ball of puddled iron deprived of its dross by shingling or squeezing.

bloom-hook, s.

Metal.: A hook or similarly-shaped tool for handling or moving about the heated bloom so as to place it under the hammer or otherwise deal with it.

bloom-tongs, s. pl. A peculiar kind of tongs used for similar purposes.

blōm, blōme, blō'-myn (English), blōme, blōme, bleme (Scotch), v. i. & t.

A. Intransitive:

1. Lit.: To blossom, to come into flower, especially of a conspicuous kind.

"It is a common experience, that if you do not pull off some blossoms the first time a tree bloometh, it will blossom itself to death."—Bacon: Nat. History.

2. Figuratively:

(1) To be in a state of immaturity; to give promise of, rather than to have actually reached, full development.

"The spring was brightening and blooming into summer."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiv.

(2) To shine, to gleam.

"—And he himself in broun sanguine wele dicht Above his vncouth armour blomand bricht."

Douglas: Virgil, 393, 2. (Jamieson.)

B. Transitive:

1. Lit.: To cause to blossom.

"The rod of Aaron for the house of Levi was budded, and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds."—Numbers xvii. 8.

2. Fig.: To produce anything morally beautiful or attractive.

"Rites and customs, now superstitious, when the strength of virtuous, devout or charitable affection bloomed them, no man could justly have condemned as evil."—Hooker.

blōt, *blōt'-tīn, *blōt'-tŷn, v. t. & i. [Not in A. S., in which blōt is=a sacrifice. In Icel. blett=a spot, stain; Dan. plette=to spot, to stain.] [BLOT, s.]

A. Transitive:

1. Lit.: Purposely or by inadvertence to allow a spot of ink or a similar fluid to fall on paper, or on any substance capable of being defiled; to blur, to stain.

"Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words

That ever blotted paper!"

Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, iii. 2.

2. Figuratively:

(1) With a material thing for the object:

(a) Of paper, &c.: To obliterate, efface; to erase.

"Blottyn' bokys. Oblitro."—Prompt. Parv.

(b) Of anything lustrous: To darken.

"He sung how earth blots the moon's gilded wane."

Cowper.

(c) Of anything symmetrical, beautiful, or both: To disfigure.

"Unknit that threat'ning, unkind brow;
It blots thy beauty, . . ."

Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, v. 2.

(2) With an immaterial thing for the object: To sully; to produce a stain of fault, sin or crime upon the moral nature, or of disgrace upon the reputation.

"Blot not thy innocence with guiltless blood."

Rowe.

B. Intrans. (formed by the omission of the objective): To let ink or anything similar fall upon paper, &c. (Lit. & fig.)

"Heads overfull of matter, be like pens overfull of ink, which will sooner blot than make any fair letter."—Ascham.

C. As part of a compound. To blot out: To efface, to erase.

1. Lit.: Of things written.

" . . . while he writes in constraint, perpetually softening, correcting, or blotting out expressions."—Swift.

2. Fig.: Of anything.

" . . . that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven."—Deuteronomy ix. 14.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between to blot out, expunge, rase or erase, efface, cancel, and obliterate: "All these terms obviously refer to characters that are impressed on bodies; the first three apply in the proper sense only to that which is written with the hand, and bespeak the manner in which the action is performed. Letters are blotted out, so that they cannot be seen again; they are expunged, so as to signify that they cannot stand for anything; they are erased, so that the space may be re-occupied with writing. The last three are extended in their application to other characters formed on other substances: efface is general, and does not designate either the manner or the object; inscriptions on stone may be effaced, which are rubbed off so as not to be visible. Cancel is principally confined to written or printed characters; they are canceled by striking through them with the pen; in this manner, leaves or pages of a book are canceled which are no longer to be reckoned. Obliterate is said of all characters, but without defining the mode in which they are put out; letters are obliterated which are in any way made illegible. Efface applies to images, or the representations of things; in this manner the likeness of a person may be effaced from a statue. Cancel respects the subject which is written or printed; obliterate respects the single letters which constitute words. Efface is the consequence of some direct action on the thing which is effaced; in this manner writing may be effaced from a wall by the action of the elements. Cancel is the act of a person, and always the fruit of design. Obliterate is the fruit of accident and circumstances in general; time itself may obliterate characters on a wall or on paper." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) blōt (1), *blōtt, *blōtte, s. [Icel. blett; Dan. plet=a spot, blot, stain, speckle, flaw, freckle.]

I. That which blots or causes an erasure.

1. That which blots.

(1) Lit.: A spot or stain of ink or any similar fluid on paper or other substance capable of being blurred.

(2) Figuratively:

(a) A spot or stain upon the moral nature, or upon the reputation; a blemish, disgrace.

"A lie is a foul blot in a man, yet it is continually in the mouth of the untaught."—Ecclesiasticus xx. 24.

(b) Censure, reproach; attack on one's reputation.

"He that reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame; and he that rebuketh a wicked man getteth himself a blot."—Proverbs ix. 7.

2. That which causes an erasure or obliteration of something written, printed or otherwise inscribed. (Lit. & fig.)

II. The act of blotting; the state of being blotted.

"A disappointed hope, a blot of honor, a stain of conscience, an unfortunate love, will serve the turn."—Temple.

"Let flames on your unlucky papers prey,
Your wars, your loves, your praises, be forgot,
And make of all an universal blot."

Dryden: Juvenal.

blōt (2), s. [From Dan. blot; Sw. blott; Dut. blot=bare, naked.]

Backgammon: An exposed piece, a single "man" lying open to be taken up.

To hit a blot: To take advantage of the error committed in exposing the "man;" to carry the "man" off.

"He is too great a master of his art, to make a blot which may so easily be hit."—Dryden: Ded. prefixed to Æneid.

blōtch, *blatche, v. t. [Formed from Eng. black, v.=to blacken, in the same way as bleach is from bleak. (Skeat.)] To affect with tumors, rays, pustules, scabs, or anything similar.

"If no man can like to be smutted and blatched in his face, let us learn much more to detest the spots and blots of the soul."—Harmar: Trans. of Beza's Sermons, p. 126.

blōtch, s. [From blotch, v. (Skeat.)]

1. Gen.: A blot of any kind, as a blotch of ink.

2. Spec.: A tumor, a large pustule, a boil, a blain upon the skin.

[A. S. blāwan, pret. bleow, pa. par. blāwen=to blow, to breathe; (N. H.) Ger. blāhen=to blow up, to swell; O. H. Ger. blāhan, plājan. Compare Lat. flo=to blow.]

A. Intransitive:

1. Lit. Of air:

(1) To be in motion, so as to produce a strong or a gentle breeze of wind.

"... and the winds blew, . . ."—Matthew vii. 27.

¶ In this sense sometimes impersonally.

"It blew a terrible tempest at sea once, and there was one seaman praying."—L'Esrange.

(2) To pant, to puff; to be out of breath.

"Here's Mrs. Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, iii. 3.

(3) To sound, to give forth musical notes. Used—

(a) Of the performer on a wind instrument.

"But when the congregation is to be gathered together, ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm."—Numbers x. 7.

(b) Of the instrument itself.

"And brightened as the trumpet blew."

Scott: Rokeby, iv. 14.

2. Fig.: To boast. [See also C. III. To blow hot and cold.]

"That owte of tyme bostus and blawes."—Avowynge of K. Arthur, st. 23.

B. Transitive:

I. Ordinary Language:

(i) Literally:

1. To direct the breath or any other current of air against a person or thing.

(1) The agent in doing so being directly or indirectly man:

(a) To use the breath, a pair of bellows, a blow-pipe or any other instrument or appliance for directing a current of air into or against anything, either to remove it (as in example), or to fill it with air, as in an organ, or to produce fiercer combustion in a flame.

"... as I blow this feather from my face."

Shakesp.: Henry VI., Pt. III., iii. 1.

(b) To warm by breathing upon, or to cool by directing a current of colder air upon.

"When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick, the shepherd, blows his nail."

Shakesp.: Love's Labor's Lost, v. 2. (Song.)

(c) To inflate; to cause to take a balloon-like form by means of the breath. (Often followed by up.) [BLOW-UP.]

(d) To sound a wind instrument of music.

"If, when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet."—Ezekiel xxxiii. 3.

(2) The agent in doing so being natural law, without the intervention of man:

"What happy gale blows you to Padua?"

Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, i. 2.

2. To put out of breath; to cause to be short of breath; to make to pant. (Used chiefly with a horse or horses for the objective.) [Generally in the pa. par. blown (q. v.).]

3. To boast.

"The pomp oft the prid furth schawis,
Or ellis the gret boist that it blawis."

Barbour: Bruce, iii. 349.

(ii) Abnormally: To deposit upon. (Used of eggs laid by flesh-flies.) Johnson can see no connection between this and the former meanings. Can the connection be that the deposition of the eggs often causes a tumor, inflation or balloon-like swelling on the skin? [B., i. 1. (1) (c).] Or should this significance be transferred to blow (2), v. (q. v.)?

"I would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than I would suffer
The flesh-fly blow my mouth."

Shakesp.: Tempest, iii. 1.

(iii) Figuratively:

*1. To spread as a report; to blaze, to blazon.

"So gentle of condition was he known,
That through the court his courtesy was blown."

Dryden: Palamon and Arcite, i. 593, 594.

*2. To make known, to betray.

"I must not be seen anywhere among my old acquaintance, for I am blown."—History of Colonel Jack (1723). (Nares.)

3. To inflate, as ambition. [BLOWN.]

II. Technically. [See example under blown, as particip. adj.]

1. Glass Manufacture: To cause glass to take certain definite forms by blowing through it when in a soft state through the operation of heat.

2. Metal: To create an artificial draught of air by pressure. [BLOWER.]

3. Among some butchers: To swell and inflate veal.

C. In special compounds and phrases:

I. To blow away: So to blow as to cause the removal of the object thus treated. (Lit. & fig.)

II. To blow down: So to blow that the object thus treated falls down.

III. To blow hot and cold: At one time to advocate an opinion or a measure with hot zeal, and soon after speak of it with cold indifference, the motive impelling to action being self-interest, and not mental conviction.

"Says the satyr, if you have gotten a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I've e'en done with ye."—L'Esrange.

IV. To blow off:

1. Lit.: So to blow that the object thus treated loses the hold which it had on something else.

2. Fig.: To cast off belief in or responsibility for.

"These primitive heirs of the Christian church could not so easily blow off the doctrine."—South.

V. To blow out:

1. Lit.: To extinguish a fire or light by the operation of wind or the breath directed against it.

"As when a lamp is blown out by a gust of wind at a casement," Longfellow: Evangeline, ii. 5.

2. Figuratively:

(a) Of light or flame: To appear to extinguish by air directed against anything, while really this is done in another way.

"Moon, slip behind some cloud, some tempest rise,
And blow out all the stars that light the skies."
Dryden.

(b) Of anything: To extinguish, to make to cease.

"And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out."

Shakesp.: King John, v. 2.

VI. To blow over, v. t. & i.:

1. Transitive:

(a) Lit. Of storm-clouds: To blow the storm from the region described to another one. (Used whether the district where the person using the expression "blow over," at the time wholly escapes, or is only temporarily subjected to the tempest.)

"When the storm is blown over, How blest is the swain." Granville.

(b) Fig.: To pass away. (Used of a trial, a disturbance, sorrow, &c.)

"But those clouds being now happily blown over, and our sun clearly shining out again, I have recovered the relapse."—Denham.

2. Intrans.: In a similar sense to the verb transitive. [BLOW-OVER, s.]

"Storms, though they blow over divers times, yet may fall at last."—Bacon: Essays.

VII. To blow up, v. t. & i.:

1. Transitive:

(1) To inflate; to render turgid.

(a) Lit.: To inflate as a bladder.

"Before we had exhausted the receiver, the bladder appeared as full as if blown up with a quill."—Boyle.

(b) Fig.: To render the mind swelled, inflated, turgid, or puffed up, or conceited by means of imagined divine afflatus, by flattery, &c.

"Blown up with the conceit of his merit."—Bacon.

(2) To kindle by blowing. Used—

(a) Lit.: Of fire.

(b) Fig.: Of strife, war, &c.

"His presence soon blows up the kindling fight."

Dryden: Annus Mirabilis, xxii.

(3) To break and scatter in different directions by the action of ignited gunpowder or some other explosive.

(a) Lit.: In the foregoing sense.

"Their chief blown up in air, not waves expir'd,
To which his pride presum'd to give the law."
Dryden.

(b) Fig.: To scold; to censure severely. (Colloquial and vulgar.)

2. Intrans.: To explode, to fly in fragments into the air through the operation of gunpowder or some other explosive.

"On the next day, some of the enemy's magazines blew up."—Tatler.

VIII. To blow upon:

1. Lit.: To direct a stream of air against.

"... like dull embers suddenly blown upon, . . ."—Tyndall: Frag. of Science, 3d ed., x. 282.

2. Figuratively:

(1) To reduce or diminish in amount by the operation of the Divine displeasure.

"Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it."—Hag. i. 9.

(2) To render stale; to discredit. [B., i. iii. 2.]

"... till the plot had been blown upon and till juries had become incredulous."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

blōw (2), *blōwe (2), *blow-en (2), v. i. [A. S. blōwan, geblōwan=to blow, bloom, blossom, or flourish; O. S. blōjan; Dut. bloeiën=to bloom, to blossom; (N. H.) Ger. blühen; M. H. Ger. blüon, blüen, blüejēn; O. H. Ger. pluon, pluoan, pluojan; Lat. floro=to blossom, to come into flower; Gr. bluō=to bubble; phleo=to gush. Cognate also with Lat. folium, and Gr. phyllon=a leaf.] [FOLIATE.]

1. Lit.: To come into blossom.

"I know a bank whereon the wild thyme blows."

Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 2.

2. Fig.: To bloom, to flourish, to come to the maximum of beauty at which the person or thing is susceptible in the course of development.

"This royal fair

Shall, when the blossom of her beauty's blown, See her great brother on the British throne."

Waller.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāl, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camēl, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marīne; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rūle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

blōw (1), a. & s. [From blow, v. i.]

A. As adjective (chiefly in compos.):

1. Through which blowing takes place. [BLOW-HOLE, BLOW-VALVE, &c.]

2. Inflated, or by means of which inflation, swelling, or tumor takes place. [BLOWBALL, BLOW-FLY.]

B. As substantive. [This may possibly be from blow (2), v., in place of blow (1), v.]

1. Chiefly in the plur.: The eggs or larvæ of a flesh-fly so often seen in decaying carcasses.

"I much fear, lest with the blows of flies His brass-inflicted wounds are filled."

Chapman: Iliad.

2. The breathing or spouting of a whale.

3. The state or condition of blossoming; as, a tree in full blow.

blow-ball, s. [BLOWBALL.]

blow-fly, s. The name popularly given to such two-winged flies as deposit eggs in the flesh of animals, thus making tumors arise. Several species of musca do this, so do breeze-flies, &c. [BREEZE-FLY, MUSCA.]

blow-gun, s. A gun for blowing arrows instead of impelling them by a bowstring. It is in use among the Barbados Indians of Brazil and the Malays of the Eastern Archipelago; the latter race of men call it sumpitan.

blow-hole, s. A hole for blowing through.

Blow-holes of a whale: Two apertures on the top of the head in the more typical Cetacea, but really constituting the nostrils, through which air and water are blown to a considerable height.

Blow-holes in iron or steel: Defects caused by the escape of air or gas during the process of solidification.

blow-milk, s. Milk from which cream has been blown. (Ogilvie.)

blow-off, a. Pertaining to that by which steam or anything else passes out with more or less noise.

Blow-off Cock. Steam-engine: A faucet in a steam-boiler for allowing a quantity of water to escape, to rid the boiler of mud; or, in marine engines, to rid it of a strong solution of salt.

Blow-off Pipe. Steam-engine: A pipe at the lower part of a steam-boiler by which at intervals sediment is driven out.

blow-out, s. A vulgar expression for a dancing party, festivity of any kind, or a hearty meal.

Glass Manufacture: An arrangement in blowing glass bottles or jars in molds in which the surplus glass is collected in a chamber above the lip of the vessel with but a thin connecting portion, so that the surplus is readily broken off without danger to the vessel itself. (Knight.)

blow-through, a. Designed for allowing steam to pass through with noise.

Blow-through Valve. Steam-engine: A valve commanding the opening through which boiler-steam is admitted to a condensing steam-engine to blow through and expel air and condensed water, which depart through the way of the snifting-valve. It is the first operation in starting an engine of this character, the condenser being then brought into operation to condense the vaporous contents of the cylinder and make the first stroke. (Knight.)

blow-tube, s.

1. The hollow iron rod used by glass-makers to gather "metal" (melted glass) from the pots, to blow and form it into the desired shape; a pontil.

2. A tube through which arrows are driven by the breath. [BLOW-GUN.]

blow-up, a. Designed for allowing steam to blow up into.

Blow-up Pan. Sugar machinery: A pan used in dissolving raw sugar preparatory to the process of refining. Steam is introduced by means of pipes coiled round within the vessels to dissolve the sugar, which thence becomes a dark, thick, viscous liquid; a small portion of lime-water is admitted to the sugar, and constant stirring with long slender rods assists the process of liquefaction. The blow-up pans are generally rectangular, six or seven feet long, three or four feet wide, and three feet deep, with perforated copper pipes near the bottom, through the holes of which steam is blown into the sugar. (Knight.) blow-valve, s.

Steam-engine: The valve by which the air expelled from the cylinder escapes from the condenser on the downward stroke of the piston when a steam-engine is first set in motion; the snifting-valve.

blōw (2), s. [From Eng. blow (2), v. In Ger. blüthe, blüte.] A blossom.

¶ In blow: In flower, in blossom.

blōw (3), blowe*, s. [O. Dut. blauwe=a blow; (N. H.) Ger. bleuen, bläuen=to beat; M. H. Ger. bliuwen; O. H. Ger. bliwan, pliuwan; Moeso-Goth. bligvan=to kill, to murder. Skeat considers it cognate with Lat. fligo=to strike or strike down, and flagellum=a whip, a scourge. Compare also Lat. plaga; Gr. plēgē=a blow, a stroke.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) A stroke.

(a) Gen.: In the foregoing sense.

"Hee [Sir J. Gates] . . . then refusing the kerchiefe layde downe his head, which was stricken off at three blowes."—Stowe: Queen Mary, an. 1553.

(b) Spec.: A fatal stroke; a stroke causing death.

"Assuage your thirst of blood, and strike the blow." Dryden.

(2) A series of strokes, fighting, war, assault; resistance by force of arms.

" . . . and that a vigorous blow might win it [Hanno's camp] with all its spoil."—Arnold: Hist. Rome, vol. iii., ch. xlv., p. 227.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Anything which strikes the senses or the mind suddenly and calamitously, as reproachful language, sad intelligence, bereavement, loss of property, &c.

"A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows." Shakesp. King Lear, iv.

†(2) Sickness or other suffering divinely sent on one, even when there is no suddenness in the visitation.

"Remove thy stroke away from me: I am consumed by the blow of thine hand."—Psalm xxxix. 10.

(3) A stroke struck by the voice, the pen, or anything similar.

"A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear,
As will a chestnut!"

Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, i. 2.

¶ Special phrases:

(1) At a blow: As the result of one defeat; all in a moment.

"Every year they gain a victory and a town, but if they are once defeated, they lose a province at a blow."—Dryden.

(2) To come to blows:

(a) Of individuals: To pass from angry disputation to the use of the fists.

(b) Of nations: To cease diplomatic negotiation and send armies to fight.

†(3) To go to blows: Essentially the same as to come to blows, No. (2).

" . . . to prevent the House of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel from going to blows with the House of Brunswick-Lunenbourg."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xx.

¶ Precise signification of blow: Crabb thus distinguishes between blow and stroke: "Blow is used abstractedly to denote the effect of violence; stroke is employed relatively to the person producing that effect. A blow may be received by carelessness of the receiver, or by a pure accident; but strokes are dealt out according to the design of the giver. Children are always in the way of getting blows in the course of their play, and of receiving strokes by way of chastisement. A blow may be given with the hand or with any flat substance; a stroke is rather a long-drawn blow, given with a long instrument like a stick. Blows may be given with the flat part of a sword, and strokes with a stick. Blow is seldom used but in the proper sense; stroke sometimes figuratively, as 'a stroke of death,' or 'a stroke of fortune.'" (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

II. Naut.: A violent wind, a gale.

blōw'-ball, s. [From Eng. blow; and ball. It is called ball because the entire compound fruit of the plant when mature is globular like a ball, and the epithet blow is applied because children are accustomed to blow away portions of it to ascertain the hour of the day. If the whole sphere of balloons, each with a seed for its ear, depart at the first vigorous puff of breath, it is, in childish estimate, one o'clock, if at two puffs, two o'clock, and so forth.] The fruit of the Dandelion (Leontodon Taraxacum). [DANDELION, LEONTODON.]

"Her treading would not bend a blade of grass, Or shake the downy blowball from its stalk." Ben Jonson: Sad Shepherd, l. 1.

blōw'-ēn, pa. par. [BLOWN.]

blōw'-ēr, s. [Eng. blow; -er.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of persons:

†(1) As a separate word: One who blows.

"Add his care and cost in bnying wood, and in fetching the same to the blowing-house, together with the blowers' two or three months' extreme and increasing labor."—Carew.

(2) In compos.: As a glass-blower, &c.

" . . . chief captain and trumpet blower . . ."—Tyndall: Works, p. 25. (Richardson.)

2. Of things: That which blows. [II.]

(1) In the foregoing sense.

(2) A child's name for the downy heads of Dandelion (Leontodon Taraxacum). [BLOWBALL.]

II. Mechanics:

1. A machine for creating by means of pressure an artificial current of air. It is the same as a plenum engine as distinguished from a vacuum engine, such as an aspirator. A blower in the form of wooden bellows was used at Nuremberg in 1550. An improved blower with a flat vane reciprocating in a sector-shaped box, with a pipe for the egress of the air, was made about 1621, by F. Fannenschmid of Thuringia. The next type was that of cylinders with pistons, which is still in use. Another one still in use is the fan-blower, believed to have been invented by Teral in 1729. Yet another is the Water-bellows or Hydraulic bellows, first made by Hornblower. The hot-air blast was patented in 1823 by the inventor, James Neilson, of Glasgow, Scotland. The main use of blowers is to increase draughts in furnaces, to ventilate buildings, to dry grain or powder, to evaporate liquids, &c. They have been recently applied to the filling of the bellows of large pipe organs, thus obviating the necessity for old-fashioned pumping arrangements.

2. An iron plate temporarily placed in front of an open fire, to urge the combustion.

3. A simple machine designed to furnish air to an organ or harmonium.

" . . . composition pedals, hand and foot blowers . . ."—London Times, November 4, 1875.

III. Hat Manufacture: A machine for separating the hair from the fur fibers. [BLOWING-MACHINE.] Blower and Spreader (Cotton Manufacture): A machine for spreading cotton into a lap, the action of beaters and blower being conjoined for the purpose. [COTTON-CLEANING MACHINE.]

blōw'-īng (1), blōw'-yngē, blō'-yngē, blōw'-and, pr. par., a. & s. [BLOW (1), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As substantive:

I. Ord. Lang.:

1. The act or operation of directing a current of air to, upon, or through anything.

"Bloynge (blowyngē, P.): Flacio, flatus."—Prompt. Parv.

2. Puffing, panting.

"Broken wynded and pursyfyne is but schorte blowyngē."—Fitzherbert: Husbandry.

II. Technically:

1. Blowing of Glass: The art of fashioning glass into hollow tubes, bottles, &c., by directing a current of air through it by means of a blowpipe [BLOWPIPE], or in any other way.

2. Blowing of Firearms:

Gunnery: The art or operation of constructing firearms in such a way that the vent or touch-hole is run or "gullied," and becomes wide, allowing the powder to blaze out.

3. Blowing up: The act of exploding a mine charged with gunpowder or anything similar; the state of being exploded.

"The captains hoping, by a mine, to gain the city, approached with soldiers ready to enter upon blowing up of the mine."—Knolles: History of the Turks.

blowing-cylinder, s.

Pneumatics, &c.: A form of blowing-engine. In 1760 Smeaton introduced the blowing-cylinders, and smelted iron by the use of the coke of pit-coal.

Pneumatics, &c.:

1. Strictly: An engine applied to the duty of driving a blower.

2. Less properly: A machine by which an artificial draught by plenum is obtained.

blowing-furnace, s.

Glassmaking: A furnace in which articles of glass in process of manufacture are held to be softened, when they have lost their plasticity by cooling.

blowing-house, s.

Metal: The blast-furnace in which tin-ore is fused. (Stormonth.)

blowing-lands, blowing lands, s. pl.

Agric.: Lands of which the surface soil is so light that when dry it crumbles, and is liable to be blown away by the wind.

1. Iron Manuf.: A machine for creating an artificial draft by forcing air. [BLOWER.]

2. Hatmaking: A machine for separating the "kemps" or hairs from the fur fibers.

blōl, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, þis; sin, aş; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f. -cian. -tian = şan. -tion, -sion = şhūn; -þion, -şion = zhūn. -tious. -cious, -sious = şhūs. -ble, -dlē, &c. = bel, dēl.

3. Cotton Manuf.: A part of the batting-machine, or a machine in which cotton loosened by willowing and scutching, one or both, is subjected to a draught of air produced by a fan, and designed to remove the dust, &c., from the fiber.

blowing off, s.

Steam-engine: The process of ejecting the super-salted water from the boiler, in order to prevent the deposition of scale or salt.

blowing off taps, s.

Steam-engine: A tap for blowing off steam.

"Blowing on aps, for use when the pistons are in motion."—Atkinson: Ganol's Physics, bk. vi., ch. 10.

blowing-pipe, s.

Glassmaking: A glass-blower's pipe; a bunting-iron; a pontil.

blowing-pot, s.

Pottery: A pot of colored slip for the ornamentation of pottery while in the lathe. The pot has a tube, at which the mouth of the workman is placed, and a spout like a quill, at which the slip exudes under the pressure of the breath. The ware is rotated in the lathe, while the hollows previously made in the ware to receive the slip are thus filled up. Excess of slip is removed, after a certain amount of drying, by a spatula or knife, known as a tournasin.

blowing-through, s.

Steam-engine: The process of clearing the engine of air by blowing steam through the cylinder, valves, and condenser before starting.

blowing-tube, s.

Glassmaking: An iron tube from four to five feet in length, and with a bore from one-third to one inch in diameter. It is used to blow melted glass or metal, as it is called, into some kind of hollow vessel. [GLASS-BLOWING, PONTY, PONTIL.]

blōw'-īng (2), pr. par., a. & s. [BLOW (2), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & a.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"... as the bloom
Of blowing Eden fair, ..."

Thomson: The Seasons; Summer.

†C. As subst.: The act of blossoming.

"To assist this flower in its blowing."—Bradley: Family Dictionary, 1, 725.

blōwn (1), *blōwne, *blowen, *blowun, *blowe, pa. par. & a. [BLOW (1), v.]

A. As past participle: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

B. As participial adjective:

1. Literally:

- (1) Driven by the wind, as "blown sands."
- (2) Inflated, as a "blown bladder."

"Grete blowen bladdys."—Seven Sages, 2, 181.

2. Figuratively:

- (1) Inflated, swollen, tumid.

"No blown ambition doth our arms incite."

Shakesp.: King Lear, iv. 4.

"How now, blown Jack, how now, quilt?"—Ibid.: Henry IV., Pt. I., iv. 2.

(2) Proud, insolent.

"So summe ben blowun with pride."—Wycliffe (1 Corinthians, iv. 18.) (Purvey.)

"I come with no blown spirit to abuse you."

Beaumont & Fletcher: Mad Lover.

blōwn (2), pa. par. [BLOW (2), v.]

"It was the time when Ouse display'd His lilies newly blown."

Cowper: Dog and Water Lily.

"Against the blown rose may they stop their nose,
That kneel'd unto the buds."

Shakesp.: Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 11.

blōw-pipe, s. & a. [Eng. blow; pipe.]

A. As subst.: An instrument for directing the flame of a lamp, of a candle, or jet of gas, mixed with air, against a spot on which is placed a minute body which the operator designs to subject to the action of more than ordinarily intense heat. The several types of blowpipe are:

1. The Mouth Blowpipe: This consists of a conical tube of tin plate about eight inches long, open at the narrow end and closed at its lower part, from the side of which projects a small brass tube about an inch long, at the extremity of which is a brass jet. The jet is inserted about one-eighth of an inch into the flame of a lamp, and a current of air is blown into the flame, which then assumes the form of a pointed cone. In the center there is a well-defined blue cone, consisting of a mixture of air with combustible gases; in the front of which is a luminous portion, containing the unburnt gases at a high temperature. This is the reducing flame; and outside it is a pale yellow one. The part now described contains oxygen at a high temperature, mixed with the products of complete combustion, being the oxidizing part of the flame. The mouth blowpipe is of great antiquity; a man using one for metallurgic purposes is represented in an ancient painting at Egyptian Thebes. It was used by jewelers during the Middle Ages for fusing metals. Its adoption as an instrument for mineralogical and chemical analysis is mainly due to Antony Swab, a Swedish councilor of mines, in 1738, and Cronstedt, who published a "System of Mineralogy" in 1758. There are various forms of blowpipe, as Gahn's, Wollaston's and Dr. Black's. To use the blowpipe it is necessary to acquire the art of keeping the lungs supplied with air through the nostrils, while securing a steady stream through the blowpipe from the mouth; the communication between the mouth and the lungs being closed by a peculiar action of the tongue, which is drawn back against the orifice. The small body to be subjected to examination may be held in a small forceps, or if easily fusible, in a small silver or platinum spoon, but the ordinary rest, the one used to support metallic oxides and many other minerals, is of well-burnt wood charcoal, in which a small cavity has been made with a knife. The body to be examined should not be larger than a peppercorn.

¶ In chemical analysis the blowpipe is used to examine solid substances.

(a) Heated on charcoal, oxides of lead, copper and silver, &c., yield metallic beads in the reducing-flame, especially when mixed with carbonate of sodium or cyanide of potassium.

(b) The blowpipe is used to make borax-beads (q. v.).

(c) Under its operation some substances are found to be fusible and others volatile; in the latter category are ranked mercury, arsenic, and ammonium compounds.

(d) Salts of zinc give a green color when heated on charcoal with $\text{Co}(\text{NO}_3)_2$ cobalt nitrate; aluminum salts, phosphates or silicates a blue color, salts of magnesia a pink color.

(e) Chromium salts fused with potassium nitrate, on platinum foil, give a yellow mass of potassium chromate; manganese salts, a green mass of potassium manganate.

(f) Salts of certain metals give characteristic colors when moistened with hydrochloric acid and heated in the blowpipe flame. Thus sodium salts give yellow, potassium salts violet, strontium and lithium salts crimson, calcium salts orange-red, barium salts yellow-green, thallium salts green, and copper salts blue-green colors.

(g) Certain metals give incrustations on charcoal when heated in the oxidizing flame. Lead gives yellow, bismuth brownish-yellow, antimony bluish-white, and cadmium reddish-brown incrustations.

2. The Bellows Blowpipe, i. e., a blowpipe in which the flame is supplied by air not by the human breath but from a pair of bellows. It is used chiefly by glass-blowers, glass-pinchers, enamellers, &c.

3. The Oxyhydrogen Blowpipe is one in which not common air but a mixture of oxygen and hydrogen is used. These being made to issue from two separate reservoirs and afterward unite in a single jet, or to pass from a common bladder through the safety jet of Mr. Hemming, are then directed through the flame, with the result of producing a heat so intense as to fuse various bodies which are found quite intractable under the ordinary blowpipe. The oxyhydrogen blowpipe was invented in 1802 by Prof. Robert Hare, of Philadelphia. One was also made by Sir Humphrey Davy at the suggestion of Mr. Children.

4. The Airohydrogen Blowpipe, in which atmospheric air and hydrogen are the two gases used.

5. Bunsen's Burner (q. v.).

B. As adjective: Pertaining to, relating to, or ascertained by the instrument described under A.

"Physical and blowpipe characters."—Dana: Min., 5th ed., p. xx.

Spenser: Fairy Queen, V. i. 13.

2. Swelled; protuberant from whatever cause. (Specially of the lips.)

"Thou sing with him, thou booby! never pipe Was so profan'd, to touch that blubber'd lip."

Dryden.

blūb'-bēr'-īng, *blub-bring, *blūb'-rande, pr. par., a. & s. [BLUBBER, v.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As substantive: The act of crying so as to swell the cheeks.

"So when her teares were stopt from eyther eye
Her singults, blubbrings, seem'd to make them flye
Out at her oyster-mouth and nose-thrills wide."

Browne: Britannia's Pastorals, bk. ii., § 1.

blūe, *blōo, *bleu, *blwe, *blo (Eng.), blue, blā, blāe (Scotch), a., adv. & s. [A. S. bleo, bleah (Somner), a word the existence of which Skeat doubts; Icel. blár=livid; Sw. blå=blue, black; Dan. blaa=blue, azure; Dut. blauw=blue; O. Dut. bla; (N. H.) Ger. blau; O. H. Ger. blāo, plāo; Fr. bleu; Prov. blau, blava; O. Sp. blavo; O. Ital. biavo. A Scandinavian word.]

A. As adjective:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

†(1) Originally livid; of the color of a wound produced when one has been beaten "black and blue."

"Bloo coloure: Lividus, luridus."—Prompt. Parv.

¶ The expression "blue" milk, used of skimmed milk, seems to be a remnant of this meaning.

"... skimmed or blue milk being only one-half penny a quart, and the quart a most redundant one, in Grasmere."—De Quincey: Works (ed. 1863), vol. ii., p. 14.

†(2) Blue-black.

(3) Of any other shade of blue. Spec.—

(a) Of the veins.

"... and here

My bluest veins to kiss; ..."

Shakesp: Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 5.

(b) Of various plants. [BLUEBELL, BLUEBOTTLE.]

(c) Of the cloudless sky, azure.

"Three gaudy standards flout the pale blue sky."

Byron: Child Harold, i. 41.

(d) Of water in certain circumstances.

(i.) Of the sea.

¶ Poets conventionally call the sea "blue." Near the shore it is generally green, yellow sand below often affecting its color. Far from the land it is oftener blue. The "Red" Sea may often be seen of a beautiful blue color.

"The sea, the blue lone sea, hath one—

He lies where pearls lie deep."

Hemans: The Graves of a Household.

(ii.) Of lakes. This also is somewhat conventional.

"O'er the blue lake ..."

Hemans: Edith.

(iii.) Of rivers and streams. So also is this somewhat conventional.

"The past as it fled by my own blue streams!"

Hemans: The Land of Dreams.

2. Figuratively: Highly derived, aristocratic; as, "blue blood."

II. Technically:

1. Optics: The color produced in a body when the blue rays which constitute one component in light are reflected, all other rays being absorbed.

2. Physic. science, spec. Bot.: A series of colors containing, besides the typical species, Prussian blue, indigo, sky-blue, lavender-color, violet, and lilac (q. v.). The typical blue most nearly approaches indigo, but is lighter and duller than that deep hue. (See Lindley: Introd. to Botany, 3d ed., 1839, pp. 479, 480.)

3. Painting: For painters' colors see C. II.

4. Her.: [AZURE.]

Costume, livery, &c.: Formerly blue was the appropriate color worn by persons of humble position in society, and by social outcasts. It was so spec.—

(a) Of servants.

"In a blew coat, serving-man like, with an orange," &c.

Mask of Christmas. (Nares.)

Prior to A. D. 1608 these blue coats had been exchanged for cloaks not readily distinguishable from those worn by masters.

"... for since blew coats have been turned into cloaks, one can scarce know the man from the master."—Act ii., Anc. Drama, v., p. 151. (Middleton.) (Nares.)

(b) Of beadles. [BLUEBOTTLE, a.]

"And to be free from the interruption of blue beadles, and other bawdy officers."—Middleton: Mich. Term. (Nares.)

(c) Of harlots in the house of correction.

(d) Of beggars. [BLUE-GOWN.]

III. Political, religious, and academical symbolism: Now redeemed from former humble associations, see II. 4, it stands—

1. Politically: In London and many parts of England, though not everywhere, for a Conservative.

2. Religiously:

(1) In England: Originally a strict Puritan of Presbyterian views; a rigid Protestant belonging to the Church of England.

(2) In Scotland: A rigid Presbyterian supporting the Church of Scotland.

¶ In senses III. (1) and (2) the expression "true blue" is sometimes used. Thus a true blue Protestant is one who shows no proclivities toward Roman Catholicism, a true blue Presbyterian one very strict in his belief and practice.

"For his religion, it was fit

To match his learning and his wit,

'Twas Presbyterian true-blue,

For he was of that stubborn crew."

Hudibras, I, i. 189-91.

3. Academically: In the annual boat race and cricket match between the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge those in favor of Oxford wear dark-blue colors, and those in favor of Cambridge light-blue. So also dark-blue is worn by partisans of Harrow, and light-blue by those of Eton.

B. As adverb:

1. As if blue. [To look blue.]

"The lights burn blue."

Shakesp.: Richard III., v. 3.

2. Into a blue color; so as to look blue.

"There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry."

Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5.

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of things:

(1) Lit.: (a) The color described under A.

"There was scarce any other color sensible besides red and blue; only the blues, and principally the second blue, inclined a little to green."—Newton.

(b) The Blue-butterfly.

"On the commons and open downs the lovely little blues are frisking in animated play."—Gosse: Nat. Hist., p. 5.

(c) A substance used in washing clothes.

(2) Fig. Pl. (blues): The same as BLUE-DEVILS (q. v.).

2. Of persons: Persons dressed in blue. Specially—

(1) Either the Dutch troops in general, of which blue is now the uniform, or more probably the blue-clad Dutch troops of life guards which came over with William III. in 1688.

"... while vainly endeavoring to prevail on their soldiers to look the Dutch Blues in the face."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xvi.

(2) The Royal Horse Guards in the British army. Though the term "the blues" is limited to these, the following regiments are also clad in blue: The 6th Dragoon Guards, the 3d and 4th Hussars, the 5th Lancers, the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th Hussars, the Royal Regiment of Artillery and the Royal Marine Artillery.

"If it were necessary to repel a French invasion or to put down an Irish insurrection, the Blues and the Buffs would stand by him to the death."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiv.

(3) Blue-stockings.

"The Blues, that tender tribe, who sigh o'er sonnets."

Byron: Don Juan, canto xi.

(4) Boys educated at Christ's Hospital.

(5) Boys in blue: Soldiers of the United States in the late civil war, so called from the fact that they wore blue uniforms, the uniforms of the Confederates being gray.

II. Painting: The chief pigments used are Prussian blue, Indigo blue, Verditer, Ultramarine, Cobalt blue and Smalt. (See these words.)

D. In special phrases:

1. To look blue: To feel disappointed to such an extent that to the imaginative the color seems to change to blue.

2. To look blue at: To look angrily at.

blue laws, s. pl. [BLUE, III. 2.] Severe puritan laws alleged to have existed at New Haven, in Connecticut, and the adjacent parts. They were not laws, but a selection of judicial decisions.

These decisions of the magistrates of the "Dominion of New Haven," became known as the blue laws because they were printed on blue paper. They were as follows:

The governor and magistrates convened in general assembly are the supreme power, under God, of the independent dominion. From the determination of the assembly no appeal shall be made.

No one shall be a freeman or have a vote unless he is converted and a member of one of the churches allowed in the dominion.

Each freeman shall swear by the blessed God to bear true allegiance to this dominion and that Jesus is the only king.

No dissenter from the essential worship of this dominion shall be allowed to give a vote for the electing of magistrates or any officer.

No food or lodging shall be offered to a heretic. No one shall cross a river on the Sabbath but authorized clergymen.

No one shall travel, cook victuals, make beds, sweep houses, cut hair or shave on the Sabbath Day.

No one shall kiss his or her children on the Sabbath or feasting days.

The Sabbath Day shall begin at sunset Saturday. Whoever wears clothes trimmed with gold, silver or bone lace above one shilling per yard shall be presented by the grand jurors and the selectmen shall tax the estate £300 ($1,500).

Whoever brings cards or dice into the dominion shall pay a fine of £5 ($25).

No one shall eat mince pies, dance, play cards or play any instrument of music except the drum, trumpet, or jewsharp.

No Gospel minister shall join people in marriage. The magistrate may join them, as he may do it with less scandal to Christ's church.

When parents refuse their children convenient marriages, the magistrate shall determine the point.

A man who strikes his wife shall be fined £10 ($50).

A woman who strikes her husband shall be punished as the law directs.

No man shall court a maid in person or by letter without obtaining the consent of her parents; £5 ($25) penalty for the first offense, £10 ($50) for the second, and for the third imprisonment during the pleasure of the court.

A. As substantive:

1. Lit.: A stocking of a blue color.

2. Fig.: A literary lady, generally with the imputation that she is more or less pedantic. Boswell, in his Life of Johnson, states that in his day there were certain meetings held by ladies to afford them opportunity of holding converse with eminent literary men. The most distinguished talker at these gatherings was a Mr. Stillingfleet, who always wore blue stockings. His absence was so felt that the remark became common, "We can do nothing without the blue stockings." Hence the meetings at which he figured began to be called sportively "Blue-stockings Clubs," and those who frequented them blue-stockings.

B. As adjective:

1. Lit.: Pertaining to stockings of a blue color.

2. Fig.: Pertaining to literary ladies; such as characterizes literary ladies.

"... how much better this was adapted to her husband's taste, how much more adapted to uphold the comfort of his daily life, than a blue-stockings loquacity"—De Quincey: Works (ed. 1863), vol. ii., p. 133.

Shakesp.: Hamlet, iii. 4.

† blūn'-tēr, s. One who or that which makes blunt. (Lit. & fig.) blūn'-tīe, blūnt'-ŷ, s. [Eng. blunt; and suff. -y; O. Eng. ie.] (Scotch.) A sniveler, a stupid person.

"They snool me sair, and haud me down,

And gar me look like bluntie, Tam!"

Burns: O, For Ane and Twenty, Tam.

blūnt-īng, pr. par., a. & s. [BLUNT, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb.)

C. As subst.: The act or process of dulling the edge or point of anything. (Lit. & fig.)

"Not impediments or bluntings, but rather as whetstones, to set an edge on our desires after higher and more permanent beauty."—Ep. Taylor: Artificial Handsomeness, p. 73.

blūnt'-īsh, a. [Eng. blunt; -ish.] Somewhat blunt. (Ash.)

"Tabular or bluntish at the top."—Derham: Physico-Theology, p. 5.

blūnt'-lŷ, adv. [Eng. blunt; -ly.] In an unpleasantly direct manner, brusquely, without circumlocution, without regard to the feelings of others.

"But came straight to the point, and blurted it out like a schoolboy; Even the Captain himself could hardly have said it more bluntly."

Longfellow: Courtship of Miles Standish, iii.

"Thou comest in so bluntly."

Shakesp.: Richard III., iv. 3.

blūnt'-nēss, *blūnt'-nēsse, s. [Eng. blunt; -ness.]

1. Of a person's manner: Unpolite, not to say coarse, plainness of speech, or offensive rudeness of behavior; straightforwardness; want of regard for the feelings of others.

"... expressed that feeling, with characteristic bluntness, on the field of battle."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiv.

2. Of a cutting or pointed instrument: Dull, the reverse of sharp at the edge or point.

¶ Regarding the relative order of 1 and 2, which appears unnatural, see BLUNT (1), a.

blūnt'-wīt-tēd, a. Stupid; doltish; dull; slow of comprehension.

blūr, v. t. [Mahn considers this as probably a contraction from Scotch bludder, bluther. (BLUNDER, BLUTHER.) Skeat deems it a different spelling of blear. (BLEAR.)]

1. Of material things: To make a blot, spot or stain upon anything inadvertently or intentionally, with the effect of marring but not of obliterating it.

2. Of things immaterial: To blot, to stain, to sully.

"Such an act,

That blurs the grace and blush of modesty."

Shakesp.: Hamlet, iii. 4.

blūr, *blūrre, s. [From blur, v. (q. v.)] A dark spot, a blot, a stain, or any other material thing which mars that on which it falls but does not obliterate it.

1. Lit.: On any material thing, as on paper.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camēl, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marīne; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trŷ, Sŷrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

2. Fig.: On any immaterial thing, as on reputation, &c.

"Leste she wil els at length come againe, and being so many times shaken of, will with her railyng sette a greate blurre on myne honeste and good name."—Udall: Luke, c. 18.

"... some unmortified lust or other, which either leaves a deep blur upon their evidences for heaven, or ..."—Hopkins: Works, p. 756.

blurred, pa. par. & a. [BLUR, v.]

1. Ord. Lang.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"The writing is coarse and blurred."—Stubbs: Constit. Hist., ii. 625.

2. Bot.: Marked by spots or rays which appear as if they had been produced by abrasion of the surface. Rare, Dr. Lindley in his vast experience never having once met with the structure described. (Lindley.)

blūr-rēr, s. One who or that which blurs.

¶ Paper blurrer: A contemptuous name for writers.

"I ... am now admitted into the company of the paper blurrers."—Sidney: Defense of Forsie.

blūr-rīng, pr. par. [BLUR, v.]

blūrt (Eng.), blirt (O. Eng. & O. Scotch), v. i. & t., also as interj. [Mahn derives it from Scotch bluiter=to make a rumbling noise, to blurt; while Skeat considers it a mere extension of blare=to make a loud noise. (BLARE, BLORE, BLEREN.) Blurt, spurt, squirt and flirt, v. t., may possibly be in imitation of the sound of a liquid suddenly jerked forth.]

A. As a verb:

1. Intrans.: To hold a person or thing in contempt.

*Followed by at: To hold in contempt.

"But cast their gazes on Marina's face, Whilst ours was blurted at."

Shakesp.: Pericles, iv. 3.

"And all the world will blurt and scorn at us."

Edward III., iv. 6. (Nares.)

II. Transitive:

1. Followed by out: To utter indiscreetly, to emit, to fling forth. (Used specially of uttering words bearing on delicate matters without taking time to consider what effect the remark is likely to produce.)

"... an indiscreet friend who blurts out the whole truth."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vii.

2. With out omitted.

"And yet the truth may lose its grace
If blurted to a person's face."

Lloyd: (Goodrich & Porter.)

B. As interjection: An exclamation of contempt. [A., I.] "Shall I? then blurt o' your service!"

O. Pl., iii. 314.

"Blirt! a rime; blirt, a rime!"

Malcontent, O. Pl., iv. 21.

"Blurt, blurt! there's nothing remains to put thee to pain now, captain."—Puritan, iv. 2, Suppl. to Sh., ii. 610. (Nares.)

¶ Blurt, master constable: A fig for the constable. (Nares.)

"Blurt, master constable, or a fig for the constable, seems to have been a proverbial phrase; it is the title of a play written by Thomas Middleton, and published in 1602."—Nares.

blūrt, s. [From blurt, v. (q. v.)] A sudden start; an unexpected blow.

"Polyperchon, ... meaning to give Cassander a slapant and blurt, sent letters patent unto the people at Athens, declaring how the young king did restore unto them their popular state again."—North: Plutarch, p. 633.

blūrt-ēd, pa. par. [BLURT.]

blūrt-īng, pr. par. [BLURT.]

"The blurring, rallying tone with which he spoke."—G. Eliot: Middlemarch.

blūsh, blūsch, blūsche, blösche, blūs-chen, blūs-shen, blis-chen, blȳs-chen, v. i. & t. [A. S. blysgan=to redden, to blush; ablystan=to blush; Sw. blygas=to be bashful, to blush; from blyg=bashful; Dan. blues=to blush, to be bashful; blusse=to blaze, to flush, to blush, to be ashamed; Dut. blozen=to blush (not blusschen, which is=to extinguish, to quench. See BLUSH, s.) Cognate with BLAZE (q. v.)]

A. Intransitive:

1. (Chiefly of the form blush): To become or be red.

1. Of persons: To become red in the cheeks, and to a certain extent also on the forehead, from agitation or confusion produced by more or less of shame—that shame springing from consciousness of guilt, demerit, or error, or from modesty or bashfulness.

"The lady blushed red, but nothing she said."

Scott: Eve of St. John.

¶ Formerly the person or thing causing the blush, if mentioned, was generally preceded by at; now for is much more frequently employed.

(a) Followed by at.

"He whin'd, and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him."

Shakesp.: Coriolanus, v. 5.

"You have not yet lost all your natural modesty, but blush at your vices."—Calamy: Sermons.

(b) Followed by for.

"To her who had sacrificed everything for his sake he owed it so to bear himself that, though she might weep for him, she should not blush for him."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

2. Of things:

(1) To be of a bright red color. (Used of flowers, of the sky, &c.)

"But here the roses blush so rare."—Crashaw.

"In that bright quarter his propitious skies Shall blush betimes." Cowper: Tirocinium.

†(2) To be of any bright color; to bloom.

"Long wavy wreaths

Of flowers, that fear'd no enemy but warmth,
Blush'd on the panels." Cowper: Task, v. 158.

II. (Of the forms blusch, blusche, blosche, blusshen, blyschen): To glance, to look.

"As quen I blushed upon that baly."

Ear. Eng. Allit. Poems (ed. Morris); Pearl, 1,083.

B. Trans.: To offer in the shape or form of a blush.

"I'll blush you thanks . . ."

Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, iv. 4.

blūsh (1), blusch, blusche, s. [In Sw. blygsel=shame; Dan. blussen=blazing, blushing; Dut. blos=a blush.] [BLUSH, v.]

1. Lit. Of persons: The state of blushing; the crimson hue produced in the cheeks, forehead, &c., by remorse, shame, modesty, bashfulness, or any similar cause.

"Here's a light crimson, there a deeper one,
A maiden's blush, here purples, there a white,
Then all commingled for our more delight."

Henry Peacham: Ellis, vol. ii.

¶ To put to the blush: To force one unintentionally to become red through shame.

"Ridicule, instead of putting guilt and error to the blush, turned her formidable shafts against innocence and truth."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. ii.

2. Fig. Of things:

(1) A crimson or roseate hue. (Used of the color of a rose, of the sky, &c.)

"Hamet, ere dawnsthe earliest blush of day."

Hemans: The Abencerrage.

(2) A look, a glance; sudden appearance.

"To hide a blisful blush of the bryght sunne."

Gaw. and the Green Knight, 520.

¶ At the first blush, at first blush: At the first glance; at the first and sudden appearance of anything.

"All purely identical propositions, obviously, and at first blush, appear to contain no certain instruction in them."—Locke.

†blūsh (2), s. [From O. Sw. blosa=a blister.] [BLISTER.]

1. A kind of low blister. (Jamieson.)

2. A boil. (Jamieson.)

blūsh-ēr, s. [Eng. blush; -er.] A person who blushes, or a thing which is red.

"I envy not Arabia's odors, while that of this fresh blusher charms my sense; and I find my nose and eyes so ravishingly entertained here, that the bee extracts less sweetness out of flowers."—Boyle: Occas. Reflect., § 5, ref. 4.

blūsh-ēt, s. [Dimin. of blush.] A young bashful or modest girl prone to blush, with slender cause for doing so.

¶ Nares says that it is apparently peculiar to Ben Jonson.

"No Pecunia

Is to be seen, though mistress Bond would speak,
Or little blushet Wax be ne'er so easy."

Ben Jonson: Staple of News, ii. 1.

blūsh-fūl, a. [Eng. blush; ful (l.)] Full of blushes; suffused with blushes. (Lit. & fig.)

"While, from his ardent look, the thumgling Averts her blushful face."

Thomson: Seasons, Summer.

blūsh-fūl-lȳ, adv. [Eng. blushful; -ly.] In the manner described as blushful.

blūsh-fūl-nēss, s. [Eng. blush, ful; -ness.] The state of being blushful or covered with blushes.

"Let me in your face reade blushfulness."—Heywood: Brazen Age, ii. 2.

blūsh-īng, pr. par., a. & s. [BLUSH, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

¶ Blushing honors: Honors fitted to elicit commendations likely to put the bearer or possessor, if modest, to the blush. Or as BLUSH, v., A. 2 (2).

"To-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him."

Shakesp.: Henry VIII., iii. 2.

C. As substantive: The state of having the face, the neck, and even the breast suffused, under the influence of emotion, with a red color.

¶ For the physiological cause of blushing see the subjoined examples.

"Blushing is produced through an affection of the mind, acting primarily on the center of emotion, and through it on the nerves, which are distributed to the capillary vessels of the skin of the face."—Todd & Bowman: Physiol. Anat., vol. i., ch. ii., p. 35.

"The region affected by blushing is the face and neck; and the effect arises from the suspension of the cerebral influence that keeps up the habitual contraction of the smaller bloodvessels over that region."—Bain: The Emotions and the Will, 2d ed., ch. i., p. 11.

blūsh-īng-lȳ, adv. [Eng. blushing; -ly.] In a manner characterized as blushing.

blūsh-lēss, a. [Eng. blush; -less.] Without blush; without blushes.

"Blushless crimes."—Sandys.

blūsh-ȳ, a. [Eng. blush; -y.] Of the color which a blush produces; crimson. Used—

(1) Of the human countenance.

"Stratonica, entering, moved a blusky color in his face; but deserting him, he relapsed into paleness and languor."—Harvey: On Consumptions.

(2) Of fruits, or anything similar.

"Blossoms of trees, that are white, are commonly inodorate; those of apples, crabs, peaches, are blusky and smell sweet."—Bacon: Nat. Hist.

blus-nen (pret. blisned, blysned; pr. par. blusnande, blisnande, blysnande), v. i. [Dan. blusse=to glow; Icel. lysa=to shine; L. Ger. bleistern=to glisten. From Icel. blys; Dan. blus=a torch; Dut. blos=redness.] [BLUSH, v. & s.] To shine.

"And brode baneres ther-bi blusnande of gold."

Ear. Eng. Allit. Poems (ed. Morris); Cleanness, 1,404.

blüss-çhände, pr. par. [BLUSH, v.] Blushing, glittering.

"That here blusschände bemez as the bryght sunne."

Gaw. and the Green Knight, 1,819.

blūs-tēr, blais-ter, blūs-tren, v. i. & t. [In A. S. blæstan=to puff; Icel. blastr=a blast, a breath. Modified from blast (q. v.)]

A. Intransitive:

1. To make a blast.

1. Lit.: To roar as a storm; to make a loud noise among the branches of trees, the rigging of ships, in the interior of chimneys, &c. (For example see BLUSTERING, particip. adj.)

2. Fig.: To swagger, to adopt a loud, boastful, menacing, defiant manner; to bully, to utter probably hollow threats of what one is able and intends to do.

"Glengarry blustered, and pretended to fortify his house."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xviii.

II. To wander or stray blindly about.

"That they blustered as blynde as bayard watz euer."

Ear. Eng. Allit. Poems (ed. Morris); Cleanness, 886.

¶ See also Piers Plowman, v. 521.

B. Transitive:

1. To blow with violence.

"Ithand wedderis of the eist draif on so fast,
It all to blaisterit and blew that thairin baid."

Rauf Coilyear Aij, a. (Jamieson.)

2. To disfigure in writing. (Scotch.) (Baillie.)

blūs-tēr, s. [From bluster, v. (q. v.)]

1. Of things: Boisterousness, noise with menace of danger. Used—

(1) Of the wind in a storm.

"The skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters."

Shakesp.: Wint. Tale, iii. 3.

"To the winds they sat
Their corners, when with bluster to confound Sea, air and shore."

Milton.

But also (2) of other sounds.

"So by the brazen trumpet's bluster, Troops of all tongues and nations muster."

Swift.

2. Of persons:

(1) Loud, boisterous menace.

"Indeed there were some who suspected that he had never been quite so pugnacious as he had affected to be, and that his bluster was meant only to keep up his own dignity in the eyes of his retainers."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

(2) Turbulence, fury.

"Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin,
Which in the bluster of thy wrath must fall
With those that have offended."

Shakesp.: Timon, v. 5.

blūs-tēred, pa. par. & a. [BLUSTER, v., B. 2.]

"I read to them out of my blustered papers . . ."

bō, *bōh, interj. [From Gael. bo (as subst.)=an exclamation to frighten children, (as adj.)=strange; Wel. bo=a bugbear, a scarecrow.]

1. Of the form bo and boh: A word of terror. (Scotch.)

"I dare, for th' honor of our house, Say boh to any Grecian goose."

Homer Travestied, bk. vii., p. 20. (Jamieson.)

2. Of the form bo (if it ever find its way to paper at all): An exclamation used in playing with infants.

bo, a. [A. S. begen=both.] (Alisaunder, 6,763.)

bō'-ā, s. [In Dan., Fr., &c., boa; from Lat. boa or bova (Pliny)=an enormous snake, said to have been anciently found in India. None, however, are at present known to exist there more than six feet long. The spelling bova is from bos, bovis=an ox, either from the notion that these snakes could carry off oxen, or from the erroneous notion that they sucked the teats of cows.]

1. Zoöl.: A genus of serpents, the typical one of the family Boidæ. The species are found native only in America, the analogous genus in the East popularly confounded with it, namely Python, being distinguished from it by the presence of intermaxillary teeth.

2. Ord. Lang.: A long fur tippet or comforter worn by some ladies around their necks. The name is given on account of its resemblance to the boa constrictor or some other large snake.

boa-constrictor, boa constrictor, s. The Mod. Lat. word constrictor is=he who or that which binds or draws together; from Class. Lat. constrictum, supine of constringo=to bind together; con=together, and stringo (supine strictum)=to draw tight. [See 1. Zoöl.]

1. Zoöl.: The best known species of the genus Boa. The specific name constrictor, meaning binder or drawer together, refers to the method through which the animal destroys its prey by coiling itself round it and gradually tightening the folds. It is about thirty feet long. It is found in South America. [BOA.]

2. Ord. Lang.: Any very large snake which crushes its prey by coiling itself around it. Unscientific persons are not particular as to where the animal came from at first; with them it is a boa constrictor whether its original habitat was in the Eastern or in the Western hemisphere. [1. Zoöl.] Used Lit. & fig.

"... but what, except perhaps some such Universal Association, can protect us against the whole meat-devouring and man-devouring hosts of boa-constrictors."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. x.

bōad (1), pret. of v. [BIDE.] An old pret. of bode=abode.

"Seeing the world, in which they bootles bōad."

Spenser: Mother Hubbard's Tale.

bōads (2), pres. of v. [BODE.] An old form of bodes=bodes.

"Good on-set bōads good end."

Spenser: Fairy Queen, VII. vi. 23.

bō-ān-ēr-gēs, s. [Gr. Boanerges. Translated in Mark iii. 17 "sons of thunder." Of doubtful etymology, but probably the Aramaic pronunciation of Heb. benei regesh, regesh in Heb. meaning tumult or uproar, but in Arabic and Aramaean thunder.]

1. As a proper name, Scripture Hist.: An appellation given by Christ to two of His disciples, the brothers James and John, apparently on account of their fiery zeal. [See etym.]

"And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; (and he surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder.)"—Mark iii. 17.

2. As a common noun: An orator who gives forth his utterances in a loud impassioned voice.

bōar (1), bōre, *bōor, *bōr, *bare, *bar, *bær (O. Eng.), bere (O. Scotch), s. & a. [A. S. bār, cognate but not identical with bar unaccented and bera=a bear; Dut. beer; M. H. Ger. bēr; O. H. Ger. bēr, pēr. Compare also Ger. eber; Fr. verrat; Ital. verro; Sp. verraco; Lat. verres, aper, &c., all=a boar; Lat. fera=a wild beast; Sansc. varāha=a wild boar.] [BEAR, CAPRA.]

A. As substantive:

1. Ord. Lang. & Zoöl.: The uncastrated male of the swine (Sus scrofa), or of any other species of the genus.

"... and bente hym brymly as a bōr . . ."

Sir Ferumbras (ed. Herrtage), 545.

"The fomy bere has bet
Wyth hys thunderand awful tuskis grete,
Ane of the rout the hound maist principall."

Douglas: Virgil, 458, 54.

¶ Wild boar: The male of a swine either aboriginally wild or whose ancestors have escaped from domestication. The Common Wild Boar is Sus scrofa; var., aper. It is of a brownish-black color; but the young, of which six or eight are produced at a birth, are white or fawn-colored, with brown stripes. It is wild in Europe, Asia and Africa, lives in forests, sallies forth to make devastations among the crops adjacent, is formidable to those who hunt it, turning on any dog or man wounding it, and assaulting its foe with its powerful tusks. Sus larvatus is the Masked Boar.

"Eight wild boars roasted whole."

Shakesp.: Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2.

2. Palæont.: Though two extinct species of the genus Sus appeared in France as early as the mid-Miocene times, yet the genuine wild boar did not come upon the scene in England till the early Pleistocene. To the palæolithic hunter of the Pleistocene the hog, Sus scrofa, was only a wild animal; but the neolithic farmer and herdsman had it in a domesticated state. (Prof. W. Boyd Dawkins in Q. J. Geol. Soc., xxxvi., 1880, pp. 388, 396, &c.)

3. Ord. Lang. Fig.: A violent savage.

"Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me:
That, in the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is franked up in hold."

Shakesp. Richard III., iv. 5.

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to a boar; designed for hunting or wounding a boar; in which a boar is the object of pursuit; resembling a boar.

¶ Obvious compound: Boar-hunt.

boar-fish, s. The Capros aper, a fish not unlike the dory, but with a more attenuated and protractile mouth, a scaly body, and no long filaments to the dorsal spines. It is pale carmine above, and silvery white below. It is about six inches long. It has the power of extending and contracting its mouth at will. When extended the mouth takes the form of a hog's snout, whence the name. It is a native of the Mediterranean.

Boar-fish.

boar-spear, s. [A. S. bār-spere, bar-spreot.] A spear with which to attack a boar in a hunt.

"Each held a boar-spear tough and strong,
And at their belts their quivers rung.
Their dusty palfreys and array Showed they had marched a weary way"

Scott: Marmion, i. 8.

boar (2), s. [A corruption of bur.] Only in composition.

1. Naut.: An officer on board a ship, whose function it is to take charge of the rigging, cables, cordage, anchors, sails, boats, flags and stores. He must inspect the rigging every morning and keep it in good repair; and must either by himself or by deputy steer the life-boat. If on a ship of war he must call the men to their duty by means of a silver whistle given him for the purpose; besides taking into custody those condemned by a court-martial, and, either by himself or by deputy, inflict on them the punishment awarded.

"The chief ambition of the great conqueror and legislator was to be a good boatswain and a good ship's carpenter."—Macaulay: History England, ch. xxiii.

2. One of the English names of a gull, the Arctic Skua (Cataractes parasiticus).

bōb bōbbe (Eng.), bōb, bab (Scotch.), v. t. & i. [Etymology doubtful. It looks, and is by Mahn and others held to be, an onomatopoeic word, i. e., in this case imitated from the sound of a body moving up and down. He considers the substantive the original word (BOB, s.). Mahn connects it with Eng. buff=to strike. Skeat believes it an altered form of Gael. bog=to wag, to shake; Ir. bogaim=to wag, to shake, to toss.] [BOB, s.]

A. Transitive:

I. Of action operating on things physical:

1. To cause to move with a short jerking motion; to cause to play to and fro loosely.

"Have you not sometimes observed what dry bobs, and sarcastical jeers, the most underling fellows will now and then bestow upon their betters?"—Goodman: Wint. Ev. Conference, pt. i.

† To give the bob: To outwit, to impose upon. A similar phrase once existed, To give the dor. [Dor.]

"C. I guess the business. S. It can be no other But to give me the bob."—Massinger: Maid of Honor, iv. 5.

II. Technically:

1. Horol., Mech., &c.: The weight at the lower part of a pendulum. (Airy: Popul. Astron., 6th ed., p. 263.)

2. Mechanics:

(1) The suspended ball of a plumb-line.

(2) The shifting weight on the graduated arm of a steelyard.

(3) The working beam of a steam-engine.

3. Metallurgy: A small buff-wheel used in polishing the insides of spoons. It is a disk of leather nearly an inch thick, known as sea-cow or bull-neck. It is perforated, mounted on a spindle and turned into a nearly spherical form.

4. Mining: A rocking-post framed into a pivoted bar and driven by the crank of the water-wheel or engine-shaft. To one end of the beam is suspended the pump-rod, to balance which the other end is counterweighted.

5. Music: A term used by change-ringers to denote certain changes in the working of the methods by which long peals of changes are produced (Troyte); a peal consisting of several courses or sets of changes. When there are more than three bells the several changes are called bob-majors, bob-triples, Norwich Court bobs, grandsire bob-triples, and caters (quaters). A bob is sometimes opposed to a single (q. v.). (Stainer & Barrett: Dict. Musical Terms. Grove: Dict. Music, &c.)

B. As adjective: Pertaining to a bob in any of the senses given under A.; as, bobtail, bob-wig (q. v.).

bob-cherry, bobcherry, s. A game among children in which a cherry is so hung as to bob against the mouth. The little player tries by jumping up to seize it with the teeth, the assistance of hands in the matter being disallowed.

"Bobcherry teaches at once two noble virtues, patience and constancy; the first, in adhering to the pursuit of one end, the latter, in bearing a disappointment."—Arbutnot & Pope.

bob-fly, s. A kind of fly found upon water.

"You can easily find the bob-fly on the top of the water."—Jesse: Gleanings in Nat. Hist., i. 300.

1. Nonsense.

2. A disturbance; nonsense.

bōb'-bīn, bōb'-īn, s. [From Fr. bobine; Sp. bobina=a bobbin, reel, or reel. Compare Ir. & Gael. baban=a tassel, a fringe; babag=a tassel.]

I. Ord. Lang.: A wooden pin with a head on which thread is wound for making lace. [II. 1.]

"Yon cottager, who weaves at her own door, Pillow and bobbins, all her little store."—Couper: Truth.

II. Technically:

1. Spinning: A spool with a head at one or both ends to hold yarn. It has one head when it serves as a cop in spinning, as a thread-holder in shuttles of looms, and as cop in warping-machines. In spinning or warping it is slipped on a spindle and revolves therewith, being held thereon by a spring or by the tightness of its fit.

2. Sewing-machine: A small spool adapted to receive thread and to be applied within a shuttle.

bobbin and fly frame. The ordinary roving machine of the cotton manufacture. Its function is to draw and twist the sliver, and wind the roving on a bobbin. The bobbins containing the slivers are mounted in several rows on a creel, which has skewers for their reception. Each sliver passes between a pair of guides, which give it a horizontal traversing motion, so that it shall not bear upon a constant part of the surfaces of the drawing-rollers between which it next passes. These drawing-rollers are arranged in pairs (see DRAWING-FRAME), and have a relatively increasing rate of speed, the second revolving faster than the first, and the third faster than the second. The bobbin has two motions—one around the spindle on which it is sleeved, and one up and down on the spindle. The former is for the winding on of the roving, and the latter to distribute the roving in coils alongside each other along the length of the bobbin. Bobbin and fly frames are of two kinds, coarse and fine, or first and second. The coarse, or first, bobbin and fly frame acts upon slivers from cans filled at the drawing-frame and placed at the back of the machine. The fine, or second, bobbin and fly frame acts upon rovings, or slubbings as they are often called, from bobbins filled at the first frame and placed on the skewers of the creel placed behind the roller-beam. (Knight.)

Weaving: Lace made upon a pillow with bobbins. The pillow is a hard cushion covered with parchment, on which the pattern of the meshes is drawn. Pins are inserted into the lines of the pattern and determine the meshes. Thicker thread, called gimp, is interlaced with the meshes, according to the pattern on the parchment. The thread is wound upon bobbins, and is twisted, crossed and secured by pins. [PILLOW-LACE.]

bobbin-stand, s. A frame for holding the bobbins for warps of a loom, threads of a warping-machine, and yarns of a spinning-machine. The bobbin or reel rotates on a spindle fixed in a base-plate. It is covered with a metallic disk, supported a little above the top of the spool on a shoulder of the spindle, and held down by a screw-nut.

Weaving: A device for winding thread or yarn upon a bobbin. The bobbin is supported on a fixed shaft, which is made to rotate continuously.

Sewing-machine: A device adapted to receive a shuttle-bobbin and rotate it so that it may be wound with thread. The winders are usually operated by being turned in contact with the driving-wheel, balance-wheel, or band. Some winders are supplied with an automatic thread-distributor, to lay the thread evenly.

bōb'-bīn-ēt, s. [Eng. bobbin; (n) et.]

Weaving: A machine-made cotton net, originally imitated from the lace made by bobbins upon a pillow. It consists of a series of parallel threads, which may be considered as warp-threads, and two systems of oblique threads, which proceed from the right to the left, and from the left to the right, respectively. Each weft thread has a single turn around each crossing of a warp, and the contrary strain of the respective weft threads gives a serpentine course to the warps.

bōil, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, aş; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f.

bobbinet-machine, s. A machine for making bobbins. It was originally derived from the stocking-frame, invented in 1589 by William Lee, M. A., of Cambridge, England. Hammond (about 1768) modified a stocking-frame to make a coarse imitation of Brussels ground; this was the pin-machine. In 1784 the warp-frame was invented, for making warp-lace; and in the next decade, the bobbin-frame. In 1809 Heathcote invented the bobbinet-machine. (Knight.)

bōb'-bīng, pr. par. & a. [BOB, v.]

"You may tell her,
I'm rich in jewels, rings, and bobbing pearls, Pluck'd from Moors' ears." Dryden.

bōb'-bīn-wōrk, s. [Eng. bobbin; work.] Work wrought partly by means of bobbins.

"Not netted nor woven with warp and woof, but after the manner of bobbin-work."—Grew. Muscæum.

bōb'-ēt, s. [Dimin. of bob=a blow (Skeat).] [BOB, BUFFER.] A slight blow, a buffet.

bōb'-ēt-ŷn, v. t. [From bobet, s. (q. v.)] To buffet; to give a slight blow to.

bōb'-ēt-ŷnge, s. [BOBETYN, v.]

bō'-bī-bā-tion, s. [From Low Lat. bobisatio, of same meaning.]

Music: A kind of sol-faing taught by Huberto Walraent at the end of the sixteenth century for scale-practice, the designations of the notes used being bo, ce, di, ga, la, mi and ni. It was called also BOCEDISATION (q. v.). The friends and the opponents of the system carried on a controversy which continued till the beginning of the eighteenth century. (Stainer & Barrett.)

bō'-bī-ēr-rite, s. [Named by Dana after Bobierre, who first described it in 1868.]

Min.: A colorless mineral occurring in six-sided prisms. It is a tribasic phosphate of magnesia. It was found in Peruvian guano.

bōb'-ō-līnk, bōb'-līnk, bōb'-līn-cōln, s. [Evidently from a proper name, Bob Lincoln or Bobo (f) Lincoln.] A bird belonging to the family Sturnidæ (Starlings), and the sub-family Agelainæ. It is found everywhere in North America below 54° of N. latitude, passing the winter in the West Indies, and going northward in summer. In the United States it is known as the Rice-bird, the Reed-bird, the Rice Bunting, the Rice Troopial; and in the West Indies, when fat, as the Butter-bird. It is the Emberiza oryzivora of Linnæus, Icterus agripennis of Bonaparte, and Dolichonyx oryzivorus of Swainson. It feeds on rice and other cereals, and is in turn itself extensively shot for food. When returning to the north, fresh from the rice fields of the Carolinas, they are so fat that in many cases they cannot fly far and in falling to the ground often burst open from the impact.

bōb'-stāy, s. [Eng. bob; stay.]

Naut.: One of the chains or ropes which tie the bowsprit end to the stem, to enable it to stand the upward strain of the forestays.

bobstay-piece, s.

Naut.: A piece of timber stepped into the main piece of the head, and to which the bobstay is secured. [STEM.]

bōb'-tāil, s. & a. [From bob, in the sense of cut, and Eng. tail.]

A. As substantive: A cut tail; a short tail.

B. As adjective: With a tail cut short or short naturally; resembling a cut tail.

† Tagrag and bobtail: [TAGRAG.] bobtail-wig, s. A short wig.

bōck, bōk (Scotch & O. Eng.), v. t. [BOLK.]

1. Literally: Of persons:

(1) To belch.

"He bocketh lyke a churle."—Palsgrave.

(2) To vomit, or incline to do so.

"Quhill ather berne in that breth bokit in blude."
Gaw. & Gol., ii. 21. (Jamieson.)

2. Of things: To cause to gush intermittently.

"While burns, wi' snawy wreaths up-choked,
Wild-eddying swirl,
Or through the mining outlet bocked,
Down headlong hurl."
Burns: A Winter Night.

bōck, s. [From bock, v. (q. v.)] Vomiting, spitting up.

"Without a host, a bock or glour."
Cleland: Poems, p. 105. (Jamieson.)

bock beer, s. [Ger. bock=a he-goat and bier=beer.] A kind of strong beer, the first drawn from the vats in the spring when the winter's brew of lager beer is broached. So called on account of the German legend which affirms that, in a competitive trial of the strength of beers brewed by two rival brewers, in which each drank the product of the other, the defeated candidate declared that it was not the beer of his rival which had made him unsteady on his legs and overthrew him, but a young he-goat which some children were chasing and which ran against him and overturned him. As the bock was blamed for his fall (although many suspected the beer) that particular variety of beer has been named bock beer in commemoration of the occurrence.

bock-blood, s. A spitting or throwing up of blood.

"Bock-blood and Benshaw, spewen sprung in the spald,
Polwart's Flying, p. 13. (Jamieson.)

Ichthy.: A genus of fishes, Diagramma; family, Scianidae. Cuvier's Bodian, Diagramma lineatum, is found in the Eastern seas.

bōd'-īce, bōd'-dīce, bod'-ies, s. & a. [Derived from Eng. bodies, pl. of body.]

1. Originally plur. Of the form bodies, plur. of body: A pair of bodies, i. e., of stays or corsets fitting the body.

"But I who live, and have lived twenty years,
Where I may handle silke as free and neare
As any mercer: or the whale bone man
That quilts thae bodies I have leave to span."
Ben Jonson: An Elegy.

2. Now, always sing.; if a pl. be required, bodices being used:

(1) Lit.: A corset or waistcoat, quilted with whalebone or similar material, worn by women.

"Her bodice half way she unlac'd,
About his arms she slyly cast
The silken band, and held him fast." Prior.

(2) Fig.: Restraint of law, or restraint of any kind.

"It was never, he declared with much spirit, found politic to put trade into straitlaced bodices, which, instead of making it grow upright and thrive, must either kill it or force it awry."
—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xviii.

bōd'-īe, s. [BODY.]

bōd'-īed, pret. & pa. par. of body, v. (q. v.) [ABLE-BODIED.]

bōd'-ī-kīn, s. [BODKIN (q. v.).]

bōd'-ī-lēss, a. [Eng. bod(y), and suff. -less.] Without a body; having no body; incorporeal.

bōd'-ī-lī-nēss, s. [Eng. bodil(y); -ness.] The quality or state of possessing a body. (Minsheu.)

bōd'-ī-lŷ, bōd'-ī-lī, bōd'-ŷ-lŷ, bod-i-liche, bod-i-licke, a. & adv. [Eng. body; -ly.]

A. As adjective:

1. Of the human or animal body: Pertaining to the body; constituting part of the body; made by the body; affecting the body; incident to the body.

† When the human body is referred to, it is generally as opposed to the mind.

"I would not have children much beaten for their faults, because I would not have them think bodily pain the greatest punishment."
—Locke.

"... an example of personal courage and of bodily exertion."
—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

2. Gen. Of a body in the sense of anything material: Composed of matter; pertaining to matter, or to material things; appreciable to the senses.

"What resemblance could wood or stone bear to a spirit void of all sensible qualities, and bodily dimensions?"
—South.

3. More fig.: Real, actual, as distinguished from what is merely thought or planned.

"Whatever hath been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome Had circumvention."
Shakesp.: Coriol., i. 2.

B. As adverb:

1. Corporeally, united with matter.

"It is his human nature, in which the Godhead dwells bodily, that is advanced to these honors and to this empire."
—Watts.

† In Col. ii. 9, bodily is the rendering of the Gr. sōmatikōs, which is an adverb. The precise meaning is uncertain; it may be (1) corporeally, (2) truly, or (3) substantially.

"For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily."
—Colossians ii. 9.

2. So to act as in some way or other to affect the whole body; wholly, completely, entirely; as "... leaps bodily below." (Lowell, in Goodrich & Porter.)

† So also colloquial phrases like these are used—"The tiger carried off the man bodily," or, "the flood carried away the bridge bodily."

bōd'-īng, pr. par. & s. [BODE, v.]

A. As pr. par.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"Not free from boding thoughts, a while The shepherd stood; . . ."
Wordsworth: Fidelity.

"Then darkly the words of the boding strain Like an omen rose on his soul again."
Hemans: Sword of the Tomb.

B. As substantive:

1. Of persons: A foreboding, an expectation, a prophecy, a vaticination, a forecast.

"Say—that his bodings came to pass."
Byron: The Giaour.

†2. Of things: An omen, a portent.

bōd'-kīn (1), bōd'-ī-kīn, bōd'-e-kīn, boy'-de-kīn, bod'-y-kīn, s. [Wel. bidogan, bidogyn=a dagger, a poignard; dimin. of bidog=a hanger, a bayonet; hence bidog=to stab, to bayonet, and bidogwr, bidogwyr=bayoneteer, cut-throat. In Ir. bideog; Gael. biodag=a dirk, a dagger.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of things:

(1) Originally: A small dagger.

"With bodkins was Cæsar Julius Murder'd at Rome of Brutus Cassius."
Chaucer: Cens. Liter., ix. 369.

"When he himself might his quietus make With a bare bodkin."
Shakesp.: Hamlet, iii. 1.

† Still used in this sense in poetry of an anti-quarian cast.

"Long after rued that bodkin's point."
Scott: Lay of the Last Minstrel, v. 9.

(2) Subsequently:

(a) An instrument wherewith to dress the hair.

"You took constant care
The bodkin, comb, and essence to prepare:
For this your locks in paper durance bound."
Pope: Rape of the Lock, iv. 98.

(b) A large-eyed and blunt-pointed threading instrument for leading a tape or cord through a hem.

"Or plung'd in lakes of bitter washes lie,
Or wedg'd whole ages in a bodkin's eye."
Pope: Rape of the Lock, ii. 128.

*2. Of persons. (Of the forms bodikin, bodekin, boydekin, bodykin; probably the same word as bodkin): Daggers (?). A scurrilous term applied to a human being, or a parenthetical exclamation.

"God's bodykins, man, much better."
—Shakesp.: Hamlet, ii. 2.

—Ibid., Merry Wives, ii. 3.

† Some philologists have resolved the oath God's bodykins into God's body kin=begotten of God, an exclamation cognate with the oath By Jesus or by the body of Christ.

II. Technically:

1. Printing: A printer's awl for picking letters out of a column or page in correcting.

2. Bookbinding: A pointed steel instrument for piercing holes, used by bookbinders and others.

bōd'-kīn (2), s. [A corruption of baudkin, or baudekin (q. v.).] A rich kind of cloth worn in the Middle Ages, the web being gold and the woof silk, with embroidery.

† The word bodkin (2) does not much occur alone; it is used chiefly in the expression, "Cloth of bodkin."

"Or for so many pieces of cloth of bodkin, Tissue, gold, silver, &c."
Massinger: City Madam, ii. 1.

bō'-dle, †bōd'-dle, s. [Corrupted from Bothwell, an old Scottish mint-master, as other coins were called Achesons for a similar reason.]

1. Lit.: A copper coin, of the value of two pennies Scots, or the third of a cent.

"So far as I know, the copper coins of two pennies, commonly called two-penny pieces, boddies, or turners, began to be coined after the Restoration, in the beginning of Charles II.'s reign; those coined under William and Mary are yet current, and our countrymen complain that since the union, 1707, the coinage of these was altogether laid aside, whereby these old ones being almost consumed, there is no small stagnation in the commerce of things of low price, and hindrance to the relieving the necessities of the poor."
—Rudd: Introd. Anderson's Diplom., p. 138. (Jamieson.)

2. Fig.: Anything of little value.

† Not to care a bodle corresponds in Scotch to the American phrase, not to care a cent.

"He cares na' for that a bodle."
—Scott: Waverley, ch. xxix.

"Fair play, he cared na dells a bodde."

Burns: Tam O'Shanter.

Bōd-lēi'-ān, †Bōd-lēy'-ān, a. & s. [From Sir Thos. Bodley, who was born A. D. 1544, and died A. D. 1612.]

A. As adjective: Pertaining to Sir Thos. Bodley.

B. As substantive: The library described below. (Lit. & fig.) [BODLEIAN LIBRARY.]

"... by the gift of many Large-Paper copies, that vast submarine Bodleian, which stands in far less risk from fire than the insolent Bodleian of the upper world."
—De Quincey: Works, 2d ed., i. 145.

Bodleian or †Bodleyan Library, s. A library founded at Oxford, England, by Sir Thos. Bodley, in 1597, who presented to it about $50,000 worth of books, and induced others also to become donors to the institution. The library was opened to the public on November 8, 1602. The first stone of a new building to accommodate it was laid on July 10, 1610. At present it contains about 300,000 volumes. All members of Oxford University who have taken a degree are allowed to read in it, as are literary men of all countries.

bod-word, s. [BODEWORD.] (Barbour: The Bruce, xv. 423.)

bōd'-ŷ, bōd'-ŷe, bōd'-īe, bōd'-ī, s. & a. [A. S. bodig=(1) bigness of stature, (2) the trunk, chest, or parts of it, †(3) the body, the whole man (Somner); O. H. Ger. botach, potach=body; Gael. bodhaig=the human body; compare also budheann=a body in the sense of a hoop or band. Hindust. badan; Sansc. bandha.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

(1) Lit.: The material framework of man or of any of the inferior animals, including the bones, the several organs, the skin, with hair, nails, and other appendages.

"And that most blessed bodie, which was borne Without all blemish or reprochfull blame."

Spenser: Hymne of Heavenly Love.

"All the valiant men arose, and went all night, and took the body of Saul and the bodies of his sons from the wall . . ."
—1 Samuel xxxi. 12.

Out of the body, absent from the body: Dead, having the soul dismissed from the body by death.

"... to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."—2 Corinthians v. 8.

(ii) Figuratively:

1. Of things:

(1) Bodily strength or ability.

"How he mycht help him, throw body Mellyt with hey chewalry."

Barbour, x. 516, MS. (Jamieson.)

(2) Matter as opposed to spirit, matter as opposed to other matter; a material substance; a portion of matter; as, a metallic body, a combustible body.

"Even a metalline body, and therefore much more a vegetable or animal, may, by fire, be turned into water."—Boyle.

(3) Substance, essence.

(a) Gen.: In the foregoing sense.

"... to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time his form and pressure."—Shakespeare: Hamlet, iii. 2.

(b) Of wine: Strength; as, wine of a good body.

(c) Substance as opposed to a shadow; reality as opposed to representation.

"A shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."—Col. ii. 17.

(4) The main portion of anything as distinguished from the smaller and detached portions, as the body—i. e., the hull of a ship, the body of a coach, of a church, of a tree, &c.

"... from whence, by the body of Euphrates, as far as it bended westward; and afterward by a branch thereof."—Raleigh.

"This city has navigable rivers that run up into the body of Italy; they might supply many countries with fish."—Addison.

(5) A general collection, a pandect; as, a body of divinity, a body of the civil law.

(6) A garment, a vestment.

"A Body round thy Body, wherein that strange Thee of thine sat snng, defying all variations of climate."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. i., ch. ix.

2. Of persons:

(1) Individually.

A person, a human being, with no contempt indicated.

"In this sense it is now rarely used, though it was once, as an independent word; but it still remains in the very common compound terms, anybody, nobody, somebody, everybody, &c. (q. v.) [ANYBODY, SOMEBODY, &c.]

"'Tis a passing shame
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen."

Shakespeare: Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 2.

(2) Collectively.

(a) A corporation; a number of men united by a common tie or organized for some purpose, as for deliberation, government, or business.

"... every peer accused of high treason should be tried by the whole body of the peerage."—Macaulay: History England, ch. xviii.

(b) A mass of men, even when not so united.

"... life and death have divided between them the whole body of mankind."—Hooker.

(c) The main part of an army; the center, as distinguished from the wings, the van-guard, and the rear-guard.

"The van of the king's army was led by the general and Wilmot; in the body was the king and the prince; and the rear consisted of one thousand foot, commanded under Colonel Thelwell."—Clarendon.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between body, corpse, and carcase:—"Body, here taken in the improper sense for a dead body, . . . is applicable to either men or brutes, corpse to men only, and carcase to brutes only, unless when taken in a contemptuous sense. When speaking of any particular person who is deceased, we should use the simple term body; the body was suffered to lie too long unburied. When designating its condition as lifeless, the term corpse is preferable; he was taken up as a corpse. When designating the body as a lifeless lump separated from the soul, it may be characterized (though contemptuously) as a carcase; the fowls devour the carcase." (Crabb: English Syn.)

II. Technically:

1. Geom.: Any figure having dimensions of length, breadth and thickness; as, a spherical body.

"The path of a moving point is a line, that of a geometric body is another body."—Weisbach: Trans. (Goodrich & Porter.)

2. Physics: An aggregate of very small molecules, these again being aggregates of still smaller atoms. The object of physics is the study of the phenomena presented by bodies. (Ganot: Physics (trans. by Atkinson), 5th ed., p. 1.)

3. Alchem. Pl. (bodies): Metallic bodies, metals, answering to the celestial bodies—i. e., to the planets. They are contradistinguished from spirits—i. e., such bodies as can be driven off in vapor; four such spirits and seven bodies were recognized. (See ex.)

"I wol you telle as was me taught also
The foure spiritz, and the bodies seven
By ordre, as ofte herd I my lord neuen.
The firste spirit quiksilver called is;
The second orpiment; the thridde I wis
Sal armoniac, and the ferthe bremstoon.
The bodies seven, eek, lo hem heer anon.
Sol gold is, and Luna silver we threpe;
Mars yren, Mercurie quiksilver we clepe;
Saturnus leed, and Jubitor is tyn,
And Venus coper, by my fader kyn."

Chaucer: Canterbury Tales, Group C., 819-829.

*4. Arch.: The old term for what is now generally called main or middle aisle of the nave of a church, and is perhaps occasionally used for the whole nave, including the aisles.

"And the forsaide Richard sall make the body of the Kirke accordant of widenes betwene the pilers to the quere."—Contract for Catterick Church, p. 9. (Gloss. of Her.)

5. Fortif.: By the body of a place is meant—

(1) The works next to and surrounding a town, in the form of a polygon, regular or irregular. (Griffiths.)

(2) The space inclosed within the interior works of a fortification.

6. Vehicles: The bed, box, or receptacle for the load.

7. Agricultural Implements: The portion of an instrument, a plow for example, engaged in the active work.

8. Printing: The shank of a type, indicating size, as agate face on nonpareil body. (Knight.)

9. Music: (1) The resonance box of a stringed instrument, (2) the part of a wind instrument which remains after the removal of mouthpiece, crooks and bell. (Stainer & Barrett.)

10. Painting: Consistency, thickness.

¶ To bear a body: A term used of colors which can be ground so fine and so thoroughly mixed with oil that they seem a colored oil rather than color to which oil has been added.

11. Law:

(1) Of things: The main part of an instrument as distinguished from the introduction and signature. (Wharton.)

(2) Of persons: The person ordered to be brought up under a habeas corpus act. (Wharton.)

B. As adjective: Designed for the body; as, body-clothes; personal, as, a body-servant; in any other way pertaining or relating to the body. (See the compound words.)

body-bending, a. Bending the body. (Used of toil.)

bö'-hê'a, s. & a. [From Wui, pronounced by the Chinese Bui, the name of the hills where this kind of tea is grown.] A kind of tea.

A. As substantive:

*1. Originally: Any kind of black tea, the assumption being made that it came from the Wui hills in China, or their vicinity. Green tea was distinguished as hyson. Perhaps in the poetic examples bohea may mean tea in general.

"As some frail cup of China's fairest mold
The tumults of the boiling bohea braves,
And holds secure the coffee's sable waves."

Tickell.

"To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
To muse, and spill her solitary tea."

Pope: Epistle to Mrs. Blunt, 15, 16.

2. Spec.: A designation given to a particular kind or quality of black tea. Nearly all the bohea imported comes from the upland parts of the province of Fokien, the remainder being grown in Woping, a district of the Canton province. Of the black teas, bohea is the least valuable in quality, the order in the ascending scale being bohea, congou, sou-chong and pekoe. Part of the bohea sold consists of the fourth crop of the Fokien teas left unsold in the market of Canton after the season of exportation has passed. Its color is brown, the make rather ragged and irregular, and the flavor coarse.

"... to export European commodities to the countries beyond the Cape, and to bring back shawls, saltpeter, and bohea to England."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiii.

B. As adjective: Growing in Wui, brought from Wui (see etymology); consisting of, or in any way pertaining to, the tea described under B.

"Coarse pewter, consisting chiefly of lead, is part of the bales in which bohea tea was brought from China."—Woodward.

B. As substantive:

1. A native of Bohemia.

2. A literary man, artist or actor, who ignores conventionalities. The French speak of the Vie de Bohème, and in most European languages the word has a similar meaning.

Bohemian chatterer, s.

Ornith.: A bird, Ampelis garrula. The same as BOHEMIAN WAXWING (q. v.). [AMPELIS, CHATTERER.]

Bohemian garnet, s.

Min.: Pyrope, a variety of Garnet (q. v.).

Bohemian glass, s.

Glass manuf.: A clear crown glass, a silicate of potash and lime, a little of the silicate of alumina being substituted for the oxide of lead. The silica for this glass is obtained by pounding white quartz.

Bohemian waxwing, s.

Ornith.: A bird, Ampelis or Bombycilla garrula. It is called also the Bohemian Chatterer. In the male the chin, the throat, and a band over the eye are velvety-black, the forehead reddish-brown, the erectile crest reddish-chestnut, the upper parts purplish-red, brown and ash-colored, the lower parts purplish-ash and brownish-red, the vent and tail coverts yellow. The wings are black and white, with a yellow spot, and have seven or eight of the secondary feathers tipped with small, oval, flatish appendages like sealing-wax. The female is less bright in colors. Length, about eight inches. It visits the north of Europe in flocks in winter, eating berries, insects when it can obtain them, and indeed almost all sorts of food. It is not specially common in Bohemia. Its breeding-place is not completely known. [AMPELIS, BOMBYCILLA, CHATTERER, WAXWING.]

böi'-är, s. [BOYAR.]

böi'-ar-in, s. [BOYAR.]

In Russia: A gentleman; a person of distinction; the master of a family.

*bö'-içhe, s. [BOTCH.] (Scotch.) (Aberd. Reg., A., 1,534, v. 16.) (Jamieson.)

bö'-i-dæ, s. pl. [From Lat. boa (q. v.).]

Zoöl.: A family of Ophidiæ (Serpents) belonging to the sub-order Colubrina. They have no poison fangs. They have the rudiments of hind limbs. The chief genera are Boa, Python, and Eryx (q. v.).

*böie, s. [BOY.]

bö'-i-ga, s. [From a Bornean language.]

Zoöl.: A small tree serpent, Ahaetulla lioceros, from Borneo.

bö'-i'-gua-cû, s. [From an American Indian language or dialect.]

Zoöl.: The true Boa Constrictor (q. v.).

bö'-i-kîn (1), s. [Etymology doubtful.] The piece of beef called the brisket. (Jamieson.)

bö'-i-kîn (2), s. The same as bodkin, Eng. (q. v.)

böil, *böyl, *böil'-en, *böy'-lÿn, *bul'-lyn, v. i. & t. [In Fr. bouillir; Prov. & Sp. bullir; Ital. bollire; from Lat. bullo, bullio=to be in bubbling motion, to bubble, to be in a state of ebullition (in imitation of the sound of a boiling liquid). Compare A. S. weallan=to spring up, to boil.]

A. Intransitive:

I. Literally:

1. Of liquids:

(1) To effervesce, to bubble up, as takes place when water or other liquid reaches what is called the boiling point. [BOILING POINT.]

"The formation and successive condensation of these first bubbles occasion the singing noticed in liquids before they beg into boil."—Ganot: Physics (trans. by Atkinson), 3d ed., p. 267.

(2) To be agitated and send forth bubbles, the cause being mechanical agitation, as of the sea by the wind, and not great heat.

"He [leviathan] maketh the deep to boil like a pot; he maketh the sea like a pot of ointment."—Job xli. 31.

"In descending it may be made to assume various forms—to fall in cascades, to spurt in fountains, to boil in eddies, or to flow tranquilly along a uniform bed."—Tyndall: Frag. of Science, 3d ed., xiv. 438.

2. Of anything placed in a liquid: To be for a certain time in a liquid in the state of effervescence through the application of great heat.

"Fillet of a fenny snake,

In the caldron boil and bake."

Shakesp.: Macbeth, iv. 1.

3. Of a vessel containing a liquid: To have within it water which has reached the point of ebullition.

"The kettle boil'd . . ."

Cunningham: The Broken China.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camel, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trÿ, Sÿrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

II. Fig. Of human passions: To be intensely hot or fervent, or temporarily effervescent. [See example under BOILING, pr. par. & a.]

B. Transitive:

1. Of liquids: To cause to bubble and rise to a certain point of the thermometer [BOILING POINT] by the application of heat.

2. Of things in such a liquid:

(1) Strictly: To subject to the action of heat in a liquid raised to the point of ebullition, with the view of cooking, or for any other purpose; to seethe.

"In eggs boiled and roasted, into which the water entereth not at all, there is scarce any difference to be discerned."—Bacon.

(2) More loosely: To subject to the action of a liquid heated to a less extent.

"To try whether seeds be old or new, the sense cannot inform; but if you boil them in water, the new seeds will sprout sooner."—Bacon.

(3) To separate by evaporation; as, to boil sugar.

C. In special compound verbs. To boil over, v. i.:

1. Lit. Of liquids: So to expand through the influence of heat as to become too large for the vessel or other cavity in which it is contained, and in fact escape over the margin or brim.

"This hollow was a vast caldron, filled with melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain."—Addison: On Italy.

2. Fig.: To be effusive in the manifestation of affection or other passion.

"A few soft words and a kiss, and the good man melts; see how nature works and boils over in him."—Congreve.

bōil (1), *bīle, *būle, s. [A. S. bȳl=a boil, blotch, sore (Bosworth); Icel. bóla; Sw. bolde; Dan. byld; Ger. beule.] [BEAL, BILE.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: The disease described under II. 1. Med.

"Roynouse scabbes,
Bules and blotches, and brennyng aguwes, Frenesyes and foul eviles." Piers Plowman.

"But houndis camen and lickiden hise biles."—Luke xvi 20.

"Boils and plagues Plaster you o'er."

Shakesp.: Coriolanus, i. 4.

2. Fig.: One who is a morally offensive spectacle.

"... thou art a boil,
A plague-sore."

Shakesp.: King Lear, ii. 4.

II. Technically:

1. Med.: A disease called by medical men furunculus (q. v.). It is a phlegmonous tumor, which arises externally, attended with redness and pain, and sometimes with a violent, burning heat. Ultimately it becomes pointed, breaks, and emits pus. A substance called the core is next revealed. It is purulent, but so thick and tenacious that it looks solid, and may be drawn out in the form of a cylinder, more pus following. The boil then heals.

¶ A blind boil is one which does not suppurate.

2. The boil of Scripture: Heb. shechin seems to be used for two or three diseases:

(1) In Exod. ix. 9, 10, 11; Lev. xiii. 18, it may be an inflamed ulcer.

(2) In 2 Kings xx. 7, and Isaiah xxxviii. 21, it may be carbuncle, or the bubo of the plague.

(3) In Job ii. 7, it may be black leprosy.

¶ In Deut. xxviii. 27, 35, the same word Heb. shechin occurs, though translated botch.

"The flesh also, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a boil, and is healed. And in the place of the boil there be a white rising, . . ."—Leviticus xiii. 18, 19.

bōil (2), s. [From boil, v. (q. v.)] (Scotch.) The state of boiling.

"Bring your copper by degrees to a boil . . ."—Maxwell: Sel. Trans., p. 372. (Jamieson.)

¶ At the boil: Nearly boiling.

bōil'-ar-ŷ, s. [Eng. boil; -ary.] [BOILERY.] Water arising from a salt well belonging to a person who is not the owner of the soil.

boiled, *bōyld, pa. par. & a. [BOIL, v. t.]

bōil'-ēr, s. & a. [Eng. boil; -er.]

A. As substantive:

1. Of persons: One who boils anything; spec., one whose occupation is to do so.

"That such alterations of terrestrial matter are not impossible, seems evident from that notable practice of the boilers of saltpeter."—Boyle.

2. Of things: A vessel in which water or other liquid or any solid is boiled.

"This coffee-room is much frequented; and there are generally several pots and boilers before the fire."—Woodward.

II. Technically:

Pneum.: A vessel in which liquid is boiled.

¶ Most kinds have separate names. Various household boilers are called kettles, saucepans and clothes-boilers; one for raising steam, a steam-generator; one for dyeing, a copper; one used in sugar-refining, a pan; one for distillation, a still; one for chemical purposes, a retort or an alembic; one for reducing lard and tallow, a digester, or, in some cases, a tank.

B. As adjective: Designed for a boiler, or in any other way pertaining to a boiler. (See the compounds which follow.)

boiler-alarm, s. An apparatus or device for indicating a low stage of water in steam-boilers. [STEAM-BOILER ALARM, LOW-WATER ALARM.]

boiler-feeder, s. An arrangement, usually automatic and self-regulating, for supplying a boiler with water.

boiler-float, s.

Steam-engine: A float which rises and falls with the changing height of water in a steam-boiler, and so turns off or on the feed water.

boiler-furnace, s.

Steam-engine: A furnace specifically adapted for the heating of a steam generator. The shapes vary with those of the boilers themselves.

boiler-iron, s. Rolled iron of ¼ to ½-inch thickness, used for making steam-boilers, tanks, the skin of ships, &c.

boiler-maker, s. A maker of boilers.

boiler-making, a. & s.

A. As adj.: Designed to be used in the making of boilers.

"... boiler-making shop."—Times.

B. As subst.: The act or occupation of making boilers.

boiler-plate, s. A plate or sheet of iron, ¼ to ½-inch thick, used in the construction of boilers.

boiler-protector, s. A non-conducting covering to prevent the escape of heat. Among the devices for this purpose may be cited: felt treated in various ways, asbestos and lagging. Allied to the above in position, if not in duty, are water-jackets to utilize the heat, air-flues and shields to protect surrounding bodies against the radiated heat.

boiler-prover, s.

Hydraulics: A force-pump with pressure-indicator, used to try the power of a boiler to resist rupture under a given stress of hydraulic pressure.

boiler-stay, s.

Steam-engine: A tie-bar by which the flat plates on the opposite sides of boilers are connected, in order to enable them to resist internal pressure. The stays cross an intervening water or steam space.

boiler-tube, s.

Steam-engine: The tubes by which heat from the furnace is diffused through the mass of water in locomotive and other boilers of the smaller class. They are usually arranged longitudinally in the boiler, and are fitted by steam and water-tight connections to its heads.

bōil'-ēr-ŷ, s. [Eng. boil; -ery or boiler; -y.] In O. Fr. boillure.] A salt-house or place where brine is evaporated. [BOILARY.]

bōil'-īng, *bōy-lyng, *bōy'-lŷnge, pr. par., a. & s. [BOIL, v.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"The boiling waves and treacherous rocks of the Race of Alderney."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xviii.

"Their wrath had been heated to such a temperature that what everybody else would have called boiling zeal seemed to them Laodicean lukewarmness."—Ibid., ch. v.

"Despairing Gaul her boiling youth restrains, Dissolv'd her dream of universal sway."
Thomson: Liberty, pt. v.

C. As substantive:

1. Chem. & Ord. Lang. (from the intransitive verb):

(1) Boiling or ebullition is the rapid formation in any liquid of bubbles of vapor of a pressure equal to that of the superincumbent atmosphere at the time. Hence it can be seen that the real boiling point of water varies with the density of the atmosphere, not being invariably 212°.

"Gelatine, obtained by boiling, is in combination with a considerable quantity of water."—Todd & Bowman: Physiol. Anat., vol. i., ch. i., pt. 41.

(2) (From the transitive verb.) The art or operation of cooking by means of heating in water raised to the point of ebullition.

"If you live in a rich family, roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office, and which it becomes you to be ignorant of."—Swift.

2. Fig.: Of the human passions: Inflamed, hot, greatly agitated.

"God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boilings of a furious, overflowing appetite, and the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance."—South: Sermons, vol. ii., § 10.

*3. Law: Boiling to death was established, as the punishment for poisoning, by 22 Henry III., c. 9. This inhuman enactment was swept away by 1 Ed VI., c. 12.

boiling-furnace, s.

Metallurgy: A reverberatory furnace employed in the decarbonization of cast-iron to reduce it to the condition for mechanical treatment by hammer, squeezer, and rolls, by which it is brought into bar or plate iron.

boiling point, boiling-point.

Physics, Chem., &c.: The point or degree of the thermometer at which any liquid boils. [BOILING.] The boiling point of any liquid is always the same, if the physical conditions are the same. It is altered by adhesion of the liquid to the surface of the vessel in which it is contained, or solution of a solid in the liquid raises the boiling point. Increase of pressure raises, while diminution of atmospheric pressure lowers, the boiling point. The boiling point of distilled water under the pressure of 760 millimeters is 100° C., or 212° F. A difference of height of about 327 meters lowers the boiling point of water about 1° C., or 597 feet ascent lowers it 1° F. The boiling point of organic compounds is generally higher as the constitution is more complex. In a homologous series the boiling point rises about 19° for every additional CH₂ in normal alcohols, and 22° in the normal fatty acids, as ethylic alcohol, C₂H₅(OH) 78.4°; propylic alcohol, C₃H₇(OH) 97°; acetic acid, CH₃·CO·OH 118°; propionic acid, C₂H₅·CO·OH 149.6°. The secondary and tertiary alcohols have lower boiling points than the primary alcohols. The replacement of hydrogen in a hydrocarbon by chlorine, or by a radical, raises the boiling point, as benzene C₆H₆ 82°, chlorobenzene C₆H₅Cl 135°, amidobenzene C₆H₅(NH₂) 182°.

"These are the very solutions, it will be remembered, which behave singularly in respect of their refractive indices, and also of their boiling points."—Proceedings of the Physical Society of London, p. ii., p. 60.

Liquids are not increased in heat after they once begin to boil; a fierce fire only makes them boil more rapidly. The following boiling points have been stated:

	Deg. Fahr.
Mercury.....	662
Sulphuric acid.....	610
Olive oil.....	600
Phosphorus.....	554
Iodine.....	347
Naphtha.....	320
Oil of turpentine.....	314
Water.....	212
Nitric acid.....	210
Alcohol.....	173
Sulphuric ether.....	113
Muriatic ether.....	52

bōil'-īng-lŷ, adv. [Eng. boiling; -ly.] In a boiling state, with ebullition.

"And lakes of bitumen rise boilingly higher."—Byron: Manfred, i. 1.

*bōisch, *bōusche, *bōysche, s. [BUSH (q. v.).] (Wycliffe.)

bōis-dŭr'-çī (s. mute), s. [From Fr. bois=wood; and durci, pa. par. of durcir=to harden.] A compound of sawdust from hard wood, such as rose-wood or ebony, mixed with blood and other cementing material, and used to obtain medallions or other objects by pressure in molds.

bōist, *bōyste, s. [O. Fr. boiste; Mod. Fr. boîte=a Low. Lat. accus. boxida, buxida, from Gr. pyxis, accus. of pyxis=a box, a pyx (Skeat).] [Box, Pyx.]

"And every boist ful of thy letuarie."

Chaucer: Canterbury Tales; The Pardoner's Tale, 307.

"Boyste or box. Pix (pixis, P.), alabastrum, C. F."—Prompt, Parv.

bōis'-tēr-oŭs, a. [In Sw. & Dan. bister=furious, outrageous, raging, grim; Icel. bistr; Wel. bwystus=brutal, ferocious; from bwyst=wildness, ferocity.] [Boast, Boistous.] Wild, unruly, untractable, rough, roaring, noisy, tumultuous, rudely violent, stormy. Used—

(1) Of the wind, the sea, waves, or anything similar.

"But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and, beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me!"—Matthew xiv. 30.

(2) Of men or animals of violent character or their actions.

"O, boisterous Clifford! thou hast slain
The flower of Europe."

Shakesp.: Henry VI., Pt. III., ii. 1.

"Brought hither Henry Hereford thy bold son, Here to make good the boisterous late appeal."
Ibid., Richard II., i. 1.

(3) Of heat: Strong, powerful.

"When the sun hath gained a greater strength, the heat becomes too powerful and boisterous for them."—Woodward: Natural History.

bōil, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, aş; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f.
-cian, -tian = şan. -tion, -sion = şhŭn. -tion, -şion = zhŭn. -tious, -cious, -sious = şhŭs. -ble, -dle, &c. = beł, deł.

(4) Of hair: Copious or disheveled.

"As good for nothing else; no better service
With those thy boisterous locks, no worthy match
For valor to assail, nor by the sword."

Milton: Samson Agonistes.

boisterous-rough, boisterous rough, a. Boisterously rough, rudely violent.

"Alas! what need you be so boisterous-rough?"

Shakesp. King John, iv. 1.

bōis'-tēr-ōūs-lŷ, adv. [Eng. boisterous; -ly] In a boisterous manner, violently, tumultuously.

"A scepter snatch'd with an unruly hand Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd."

Shakesp.: King John, iii. 4.

bōis'-tēr-ōūs-nēss, s. [Eng. boisterous; -ness.] The quality of being boisterous; tumultuousness, turbulence.

"... the boisterousness of men elated by recent authority."—Johnson: Life of Prior.

bōi'st-ōūs, *bōy-stōws, *bōyste-ōūs, *bouste-ous, *buys-tous, a. [Wel. buystus = brutal, ferocious; from buyst = savage, ferocious.] Boisterous, noisy. [BOISTEROUS, BOYSTOUS.]

"The fader roos and for they shuld here
What that he did, in a boistous manere Vnto his chest . . ."

Occleve: De Regimine Principum (1420), 606.

bōi'st-ōūs-lŷ, *boysteously, adv. [Eng. boistously; -ly.] In a boisterous manner.

"... inflamed also with anger, spite, and vengeance, they boysteously entered among the people."—Bale: Image, p. ii.

bōi'st-ōūs-nēss, *bōi'st-ous-nesse, *boyste-ousnes, *boystowenese, s. [O. Eng. boistous; -ness.] Boisterousness. Used—

1. Of the wind.

"... the boysteousnes of the winde."

Udall: Matthew, ch. xiv.

2. Of persons temporarily or permanently violent.

"... my boistousnesse."—Chaucer: Dreame.

bō-ŷt (1), s. (Scotch.) The same as boat, Eng. (q. v.) (Aberd. Reg., v. 15.) (Jamieson.)

boit-schipping, s. A company belonging to a boat.

"For him and his boit-schipping on that ane part, &c. Gif ony of thaim, or ony of their boitschipping, war convict, &c."—Aberd. Reg., A. 1538, v. 16.

bō-i-tŷ-a'-pō, s. [From a Brazilian Indian name.] A venomous serpent found in Brazil.

bōiy, s. [Boy.] A boy.

"And blue in a bourde; borwed boiyes clothes."

William of Palerne (ed. Skeat), 1705.

bōk, v. i. [Bock.] (Scotch.)

bōk (1), s. [Bock.] (Scotch.)

bok (2), s. [Book.] (Chaucer: Canterbury Tales, 4,472.)

bok-lered, a. Book-learned.

"He bede his burnes bogh to that were bok-lered."

Ear. Eng. Allit. Poems (ed. Morris); Cleanness, 1551.

bok (3), s. [Back.] The back. [BILL (1), s.]

¶ Bok and bil: Back and front.

"... and to—hewe the Sarasyus bothe bok and bil; here herte blod mad they swete."—Sir Ferumb. (ed. Herrtage), 2,654.

bōk (4), s. [Etymology doubtful. Is it O. Eng. bok = back? Only in plur. (boks).] Corner teeth.

"My boks are spruning he and bauld."

Maitland: Poems, p. 112. (Jamieson.)

bō-kar-dō, †bō-car-dō, s. [A word without obvious meaning, constructed artificially to contain the vowels o, a, and again o, these being logical symbols. See def.]

I. Generally of the form bokardo:

Logic: The fifth mood of the third figure of syllogisms. A being the universal affirmative, and O the particular negative, bokardo has a particular negative in the major premise, a universal affirmative in the minor one, and the conclusion, if correctly drawn, will also have a particular affirmative. In logical formula some Y's are not X's, every Y is Z, therefore some Z's are not X's; as, not all the kings of the world are really kingly, all doubtless are called so by the courtiers who surround them, but this only shows that in some cases at least the interested statements of courtiers are wholly untrustworthy. Bokardo is sometimes called Dokamo.

II. Of the form bocardo:

Ordinary Language and Topography:

1. Lit.: The old north gate of Oxford, England, taken down in 1771. It was sometimes used as a prison. (Nares.)

2. Gen.: Any prison. [Eng.]

"Was not this [Achab] a seditious fellow? Was he not worthy to be cast in bocardo or little-ease?"—Latimer: Sermons, fol. 105, C. (Nares.)

boke, s. [BOOK.] (Piers the Plowman; Vision, vii. 85.)

boke, pret. tense & pa. par. [BAKE.] (Wycliffe.)

bō-kē'ik, s. [From bo, a meaningless monosyllable used in playing with children. Scotch, &c., keik = peep. (BO-PEEP.) In Mod. Scotch the syllables are now often inverted, and it becomes keik-bo.] Bo-peep.

"They play bokelk, even as I war a skar."

Lindsay: Pink. S. P. R., ii. 148.

bok'-el-er, *bokelere, s. [BUCKLER.]

"'Brother,' sayde Gamelyn, 'com a litel ner,
And I wil teche the a play atte bokeler.'"

Chaucer: Canterbury Tales; Cook's Tale of Gamelyn, 135-6.

(See also Prompt. Parv.)

bok'-el-ing, s. [BUCKLING.] (Chaucer: The Knightes Tale, 1,645.)

bok-el-yn, v. t. [From bokel = a buckle, and O. Eng. suff. -yn = Mod. Eng. -ing.]

"Bokelyn, or spere wythe bokylle. Plusculo."—Prompt. Parv.)

bok'-en, s. pl. Books.

"Thog he ne be lered on no boken, Lauen god and seruen him ay."

Story of Genesis and Exodus (ed. Morris), 4, 5.

bōk'-ēr-ām, s. [BUCKRAM.] (Prompt. Parv.)

bōk'-ēt, *bōk'-ēt, s. [BUCKET.] (Chaucer: The Knightes Tale, 675.) (Prompt. Parv.)

boks, s. pl. [BOK, s. (3)]

bōk'-yll, *bōk'-ülle, s. [BUCKLE.] (Prompt. Parv.)

bol (1), s. [BOLE.] (Sir Gawayne, 766.)

bol (2), s. [BULL.] Bull.

"Bot a best that he be, a bol other an oxe."

Ear. Eng. Allit. Poems (ed. Morris); Cleanness, 1,682.

bol'-age, s. [BULLACE.] (William of Palerne.)

bō-l-ār-ŷ, a. [Eng. bole; -ary. Fr. bolaire.] Pertaining to bole; having the qualities of bole. [BOLE, 5.]

"A weak and inanimate kind of loadstone, with a few magnetical lines, but chiefly consisting of a bolary and clammy substance."—Browne: Vulgar Errors.

bol'-as (1), s. [BULLACE.] (Prompt. Parv.) bō-lās (2), s. [In Sp. bolas; from the Paraguay Indian language. But compare also Sp. bolear . . . = to throw a ball.] [BOLIS.] A kind of missile consisting of a single stone at the end of a rope, two or more stones connected by a rope, or anything similar, one kind or other of which is used by the Patagonians, the Paraguay Indians, and the Spanish and Portuguese inhabitants of South America. In war a Patagonian uses a one-stone bolas, hurling the stone at his adversary while retaining the string in his own hand. The Esquimaux bolas is made of a number of walrus' teeth at the end of strings knotted together. For the bolas of the South Americans of remote European descent, see the example which follows.

"The bolas, or balls, are of two kinds: the simplest, which is chiefly used for catching ostriches, consists of two round stones, covered with leather, and united by a thin plaited thong about eight feet long. The other kind differs only in having three balls united by the thongs to a common center. The Gaucho holds the smallest of the three in his hand, and whirles the other two round and round his head; then, taking aim, sends them like chain-shot revolving through the air. The balls no sooner strike any object, than, winding round it, they cross each other, and become firmly hitched. The size and weight of the balls vary according to the purpose for which they are made. When of stone, although not larger than an apple, they are sent with such force as sometimes to break the leg even of a horse. I have seen the balls made of wood, and as large as a turnip, for the sake of catching these animals without injuring them. The balls are sometimes made of iron, and these can be hurled to the greatest distance. The main difficulty in using either lazo or bolas is to ride so well as to be able, at full speed, and while suddenly turning about, to whirl them so steadily round the head as to take aim; on foot any person would soon learn the art."—Darwin: Voyage round the World, ch. iii., pp. 44, 45.

bōi-bōc'-ēr-ūs, s. [Gr. bolbos, Lat. bulbus = a certain bulbous plant, a bulb, and keras, a horn = bulbous-horned.]

Entom.: A genus of lamellicorn beetles with bulbous antennæ. They belong to the family Geotrupidæ. In India they often fly into the European bungalows in the evening, attracted, like other insects, by the glare of the lamps. At least sixteen species are known.

bōi-bōn-āc, s. [Etym. doubtful.]

Popul. Bot.: A cruciferous plant, Lunaria biennis (Lyte). Another name for it is Honesty.

bōld, *bōlde, *bōold, *bōolde, *bāld, *belde, *beald (Eng.), bāuld (Scotch), a., adv. & s. [A. S. beald, bald, bold = bold; Sw. bald = proud, haughty, audacious; Icel. ballr; Dan. bald; O. H. Ger. pald; Gothic balþis = bold; Dut. bout; Fr. baud; Prov. baudos, baut; Ital. baldo.]

A. As adjective:

I. Of persons or other responsible beings capable of action:

(1) In a good sense: Heroic, brave, gallant, courageous, daring, brave, intrepid, fearless.

"The wicked flee when no man pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a lion."—Proverbs xxviii. 1.

"Virtue is bold and goodness never fearful."

Shakesp.: Measure for Measure.

¶ Some Anglo-Saxon proper names have the A. S. bald = bold, in them; as, Baldewin, Balduin = bold in battle, win being = a contest, a battle.

(2) In an indifferent sense: Confident, not doubting, with regard to a desired result.

"We were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention."—1 Thess. ii. 2.

(3) In a bad sense:

(a) Bad.

"'Eue,' seide he, at neddre bold,

'Quat oget nu that for-bode o-wold.'"

Story of Genesis and Exodus (ed. Morris), 323-4.

(b) Stubborn.

"The wex her hertes nithful and bold."

Story of Genesis and Exodus (ed. Morris), 1,917.

(c) Impudent, rude; full of effrontery.

"Bolde, or to homely. Presumptuosus, effrons, C. F."—Prompt. Parv.

"But in thy prosperity he will be as thyself, and will be bold over thy servants."—Ecclesiasticus vi. 11.

"... little Callum Beg (he was a bauld mischievous callant that) . . ."—Scott: Waverley, ch. lxiii.

II. Of things:

1. Of an enterprise: Requiring courage for its execution.

"... the flame of bold rebellion."

Shakesp.: 2 Henry IV. (Induction.)

2. Of joy or other mental emotion: Vehement, swelling, exuberant.

"The tather—him at this unlook'd-for gift.

A bolder transport seizes."

Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. vii.

3. Of figures and expressions in literary composition, of details in painting, architecture, &c.:

(1) In a good sense: Executed with spirit; the reverse of tame.

"Catachreses and hyperboles are to be used judiciously, and placed in poetry, as heightenings and shadows in painting, to make the figure bolder, and cause it to stand off to sight."—Dryden.

"The cathedral church is a very bold work, and a masterpiece of Gothic architecture."—Addison on Italy.

(2) In a slightly bad sense: Overstepping the usual limits; audacious, even to temerity, in conception or execution.

"The figures are bold even to temerity."—Cowley.

"Which no bold tales of gods or monsters swell,

But human passions, such as with us dwell."

Waller.

4. Of a coast or line of cliff: Standing out to the eye; running out into prominence; high and steep, abrupt, or precipitous.

"And mingled with the pine trees blue

On the bold cliffs of Ben-venue."

Scott: Lady of the Lake, i. 5.

5. Of type or handwriting: Conspicuous, easily read. "A good, bold type."

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between bold, fearless, intrepid, and undaunted: "Boldness is positive; fearlessness is negative; we may therefore be fearless without being bold, or fearless through boldness. Fearlessness is a temporary state; we may be fearless of danger at this, or at that time, fearless of loss, and the like; boldness is a characteristic, it is associated with constant fearlessness. Intrepidity and undauntedness denote a still higher degree of fearlessness than boldness: boldness is confident, it forgets the consequences; intrepidity is collected, it sees the danger, and faces it with composure; undauntedness is associated with unconquerable firmness and resolution; it is awed by nothing. The bold man proceeds on his enterprise with spirit and vivacity; the intrepid man calmly advances to the scene of death and destruction; the undaunted man keeps his countenance in the season of trial, in the midst of the most terrifying and overwhelming circumstances." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

B. As adverb: Boldly.

"And he him answered modi and old."

Story of Genesis and Exodus (ed. Morris), 2,723.

C. As substantive. Plur. or collective. (Formed by the omission of a substantive, such as persons, after the adjective.) Daring persons; as, "the bold."

D. In special phrases:

¶ To make bold: To take the liberty of saying or doing something audacious.

"I will make bold to send them."

Shakesp.: Cymbeline, i. 6.

"Making so bold . . ."—Ibid., Haplet, v. 2.

"I durst not make thus bold with Ovid . . ."—Dryden.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāli, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camel, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rūle, fūll; trŷ, Sŷrian. æ. œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

bold-face, boldface, s. A term for an impudent person.

"How now, boldface! cries an old trot; sirrah, we eat our own hens, I'd have you know; what you eat you steal."—L'Estrange.

bold-faced, a. Of a bold face; generally in a bad sense; impudent, shameless.

"The other would be said nay, after a little argumentation, and somewhat else; but this bold-faced Shame would never have done."—Bunyan: Pilgrim's Progress, pt. i.

bona-roba, buonarobba, s. [Robba is from Ital. roba=a robe, goods, estate.] A cant term for a handsome but wanton girl.

¶ Cowley seems to have considered it as implying a fine tall figure.

"I would neither wish that my mistress nor my fortune should be a bona-roba,—but as Lucretius says, Parvula . . ."—Cowley: On Greatness. (Nares.)

bona-socia, s. A good companion.

"Tush, the knaves keepers are my bona-socias and my pensioners."—Ben Jonson: Merry Devil, O. Pl. v. 268.

bōn'-a-ble, a. [Etym. doubtful. Perhaps for banable=cursable (Stevens), or from boneable=able in the bones (Nares), or bon=good, and able (Nares).] For def. see etym.

"Diccon! it is vengeable knave, gammer, 'tis a bonable horson."—Gammer Gurton's Needle, iii. 2.

bōn'-āc-cord, s. [From Fr. bon=good, and accord=agreement.] Agreement; amity.

"Articles of Bonaccord to be condescended upon by the magistrates of Aberdeen. . . . We heartily desire your subscriptions and seal to their reasonable demands, or a peremptory or present answer of bonaccord or mal-accord."—Spalding, i. 214, 216 (2d).

¶ It seems to have been formerly used by way of toast, as expressive of amity and kindness.

"During the time he was in Aberdeen, he got no bon-accord drunken to him in wine; whether it was refused, or not offered, I cannot tell."—Spalding, ii. 57.

bōn'-āçe, s. & a. [Etym. doubtful.]

bonace-bark, s.

Bot.: The name of a shrub, the Daphne tinifolia, which grows in Jamaica.

bonaille, bonalais, s. [BONNAILLIE.]

bōn'-āir', a. [BONERE.]

bōn'-āire-tē, s. [Contr. from Fr. débonnaireté=gentlemen.] Gentlemen. (Chaucer.)

bōn'-āir'-nēsse, s. [Bonere; -ness.] Meekness, humility. (Wycliffe: 1 Corinthians, iv. 21.)

bōn-a-par'-tē-a, s. [Named after the world-renowned Napoleon Bonaparte. He was born at Ajaccio in Corsica on August 15, 1769, his remote ancestors being Italians emigrant from Tuscany. He compelled the evacuation of Toulon in 1793, became Brigadier-general of French artillery in February, 1794, and was appointed on February 23, 1796, to command the army of Italy, soon after gaining, among other victories over the Austrians, those of Montenotte on April 12, 1796; Lodi on May 10, 1796; and Arcola on November 14-17, 1796. In a Turco-Egyptian campaign were the victories of the Pyramids, July 13 and 21, 1798; Aboukir, July 25, 1799, and others. On December 24, 1799, he became first-consul, and on June 14, 1800, he defeated the Austrians at Marengo; on August 2, 1802, he became consul for life, and on May 18, 1804, emperor. On November 13, 1805, he entered Vienna, and on December 2 he gained the great victory of Austerlitz over the Russians and Austrians, and on October 14, 1806, that of Jena over the Prussians, entering Berlin on October 27. On February 7 and 8, 1807, he fought the indecisive battle of Eylau. On June 14, 1807, he was victorious over the Russians at Friedland. On May 12, 1809, he again entered Vienna. In conflict with Austria, he lost the battles of Aspern and Essling on May 21 and 22, 1809, but was successful at Wagram on July 5 and 6. A victory, but with heavy loss to the victors, was gained over the Russians at the Borodino on September 7, 1812. On the 14th he entered Moscow, from which he began his disastrous retreat on October 19. The battle of Beresina was on November 26 and 27. He was victorious over the Russians and Prussians at Lutzen on May 2, 1813, and at Bautzen on the 21st, but was decisively defeated by the Russians and Prussians at the great battle of Leipsic on October 16, 18 and 19. On April 5, 1814, he renounced the thrones of France and Italy, and consented to have his rule limited to the island of Elba. Reappearing in France on March 1, 1815, he was decisively defeated by Wellington at Waterloo on June 18, 1815, and, surrendering on July 15 to the English, died in exile in St. Helena on May 20, 1821.]

bōnd, bōnde, s. & a. [A different spelling of band (q. v.). Band, bend, and bond were originally but different methods of writing the same word. (Trench: Eng. Past and Present, p. 65.)]

A. As substantive:

1. Ordinary Language:

1. That which ties or restrains.

(1) Of a physical tie or restraint:

(a) Cords, ropes, chains, or anything similar with which a person or other living creature is bound.

"Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder, I gain'd my freedom."

Shakesp.: Comedy of Errors, v. 1.

(b) Anything which holds matter together, as attraction, cohesion, &c.; also that part of a built structure which ties the other portion together. [II. 1, 2, 3, 4.]

"Their round figure clearly indicates the existence of some general bond of union in the nature of an attractive force. . . ."—Herschel: Astronomy, 5th ed. (1855), § 866.

(2) Of a moral tie or restraint: That which restrains the conscience, the affections, the passions, or the will—viz., Divine or human law. Spec.—

(a) A vow to God.

"If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; . . ."—Numbers xxx. 2.

(b) An oath or promise made to a human being; a formally contracted obligation, or its record in writing; a promise. [II. 6.]

"Go with me to a notary, seal me there

Your single bond."

Shakesp.: Merchant of Venice, i. 3.

"What if I ne'er consent to make you mine:

My father's promise ties me not to time;

And bonds without a date, they say, are void."

Dryden: Spanish Friar, iii. 3.

¶ The hymeneal bond: The matrimonial bond, the bond of marriage.

(c) The tie of affection.

"It does not feel for man; the natural bond

Of brotherhood is sever'd as the flax."

Cowper: The Task, bk. ii.

(d) Habit, produced by practice.

"Time was, he closed as he begun the day

With decent duty, not ashamed to pray:

The practice was a bond upon his heart;

A pledge he gave for a consistent part."

Cowper: Tirocinium.

(e) Other force, power, influence, or constraint.

"Ne wai non so wis than in al his lond,

The kude vn-don this dremes bond."

Story of Genesis and Exodus, 2, 113-4.

2. The state of being tied or placed under physical or moral restraint.

(1) Sing.: Obligation; duty.

"I love your Majesty

According to my bond."

Shakesp.: King Lear, i. 1.

(2) Plur.: Chains taken by metonymy to stand for a state of imprisonment, with the suffering thus resulting.

" . . . but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds."—Acts xxiii. 29.

¶ In bond: In prison.

"And her wrighteslike holden in bond."

Story of Genesis and Exodus, 2, 076.

II. Technically:

1. Masonry: A stone or brick which is laid with its length across a wall, or extends through the facing course into that behind, so as to bind the facing to the backing. Such stones are known also as binders, bond-stones, binding-stones, through-stones, perpend-stones and headers. [CROSS-BOND.]

2. Bricklaying: A particular mode of disposing bricks in a wall so as to tie and break joint. The English bond has courses of headers alternating with courses of stretchers. In the Flemish bond each course has stretchers and headers alternately. In the figure, A is a header; B, a stretcher; C, a bond of hoop-iron; D, a timber-bond.

Bonds

3. Roofing: The distance which the tail of a shingle or slate overlaps the head of the second course below. A slate 27 inches long, and having a margin of 12 inches gauge exposed to the weather, will have 3 inches bond, or lap. The excess over twice the gauge is the bond.

4. Carp.: Tie-timbers placed in the walls of a building, as bond-timbers, lintels, and wall-plates.

5. Chem.: A graphic representation of the method in which the atomicity of an element in a molecule is satisfied by combination with another element, or elements, according to their atomicity. Thus a monad is represented as having one bond, a dyad as having two, a triad three, and a tetrad four. These are represented by straight lines connecting the atoms; thus, H—Cl, H—O—H, N $\begin{smallmatrix} \diagup H \\ -H \\ \diagdown H \end{smallmatrix}$, H $\begin{smallmatrix} H \\ -C \\ H \end{smallmatrix}$ H.

(Example, Fowne's Inorganic Chemistry, 12th ed., p. 258.)

6. Law: A written acknowledgment or binding of a debt under seal. The person who gives the bond is called the obligor, and he to whom it is given the obligee. A bond is called single when it does not contain a penalty, and an obligation when it does. If two or more persons bind themselves in a bond jointly and severally, the obligee may sue them jointly or single out any one of the number he pleases to sue; but if they are bound jointly, and not severally, he must sue them jointly or not at all. Bonds of an immoral character are void at law. (Wharton.) [ARBITRATION BOND, COVENANT, DEFEASANCE, RECOGNIZANCE.]

7. Customs laws: When an excisable article is imported or manufactured in this country, the importer or manufacturer has the privilege of postponing the full payment of the duty thereon until such time as he may elect (within certain limits) the goods in the meantime being left in government

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camēl, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marīne; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rūle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

custody in warehouses that are styled bonded warehouses, and bond given for payment of the duty, the goods themselves being said to be in bond until they are released by payment of the duty.

B. As adjective:

1. Of persons:

(1) In a state of slavery.

"And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, . . ."—Revelation xiii. 16.

(2) Under a legal "bond" [II. 6] or obligation.

2. Of things: Involving an obligation; pertaining to an obligation; designed for the printing of bonds.

bond-creditor, s. A creditor who is secured by a bond. (Blackstone.)

bond-debt, s. A debt contracted under the obligation of a bond.

bōnd, v. t. [From bond, s. (q. v.).] To secure payment by giving a bond for. Generally in the past participle or participial adjective, bonded (q. v.).

bōnd'-age (age as ig), s. [In O. Fr. bondage=a bond-tenant (Kelham); Low Lat. bondagium. But Skeat considers that it really came from Icel. bondi=a husbandman, a short form of buandi=a tiller of the soil, from bua=to till.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) The state of being bound; the state of being under restraint or compulsion; slavery, captivity, imprisonment.

"For the Lord, our God, He it is that brought us up and our fathers out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage, . . ."—Joshua xxiv. 17.

(2) The state of being in political subjection.

"Think'st thou the mountain and the storm
Their hardy sons for bondage form?"

Hemans: Wallace's Invocation to Bruce.

2. Figuratively:

(1) The state of being under the restraint of fear or terror, love, or any other emotion.

"And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."—Hebrews ii. 15.

"If she has a struggle for honor, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way."—Pope.

(2) The state of being bound by covenant or other obligation.

"He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money."—South.

II. Old English Law: Villeinage; tenure of land on condition of rendering various menial services to the feudal lord. In O. Scotch the word in this sense is corrupted into bonnage.

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) Sing.: In the same sense as II., 1. Physiol. (q. v.).

(2) Plur. Spec.: The whole articulated skeleton, or even the corpse.

" . . . let no man move his bones. So they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria."—2 Kings xxiii. 18.

(3) Small pieces of wood used by builders, &c., for "setting out" work. [BONING-STICK.]

* (4) Used for the stalks or refuse of flax.

"Youre strengthe schal be as a deed sparcle of bonys. (ether of herdis or flaxe)."—Wycliffe: Isaiah i. 31, (Purvey.)

2. Figuratively:

(1) Plur.: Dice.

"And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play."

Dryden.

(2) (See 3.)

3. In special phrases:

(1) A bone of contention: Something which incites to quarrel, as dogs often do about a literal bone.

(2) A bone to pick: Something to occupy one in an interesting way and keep him quiet, as dogs become silent when they have obtained a bone to gnaw.

¶ To have a bone to pick with any one is to have a cause of quarrel with or complaint against him.

(3) To be upon the bones: To attack.

(4) To get one's living out of the bones:

Amonglace-makers: To get one's living by weaving bone-lace (q. v.). (Nares.)

(5) To make bones: To hesitate. The metaphor is taken from the idea of wasting time in picking bones.

"When mercers make more bones to swere and lye."

George Gascoyne, 1,087.

(6) To make no bones: To swallow whole, not to scruple about doing something.

(7) To bone an article: A cant phrase meaning "to steal."

II. Technically:

1. Physiol.: A hard, dense, opaque substance used as the internal framework of man, the vertebrata and some cephalopoda, and as the external covering of several classes of animals. It is composed partly of an organic (or animal) and partly of an inorganic (or earthy) material. In a child the earthy material is a trifle under half the weight of the bone, in an adult four-fifths, and in an old person seven-eighths. The animal part of bone consists of cartilage, with vessels, medullary membrane and fat. Three hours' boiling will convert it into gelatine. The earthy part consists of phosphate and carbonate of lime, with smaller portions of phosphate and carbonate of magnesia. The outer portion of a bone is in general compact and strong, the interior reticular, spongy, or cancellated, that is, having spaces or cells (called cancelli) communicating freely with each other. [CANCELLI.] The hard surface of bone is covered by a firm, tough membrane called the periosteum. [PERIOSTEUM.] In the compact tissue are vascular canals called Haversian Canals [HAVERSIAN.] There are in bone pores coalescing into a lacuna beneath. It has blood-vessels and nerves. Bones may be classified into Long, Short, Flat and Irregular. A long bone is divided into a shaft or central part and two extremities. There are 193 bones in the fully developed human skeleton.

bōll, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, aș; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f. -cian, -tian = șan. -tion, -sion = șhũn; -țion, -șion = zhũn. -tious, -cious, -sious = șhũs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bəl, dəl.

2. Chem.: Bones consist partly of animal and partly of earthy matter. The former is called ossein (q. v.). It yields gelatine on being boiled. The composition of human bones, as analyzed by Berzelius, is—

Animal matter soluble by boiling.....	32.17
Vascular substance.....	1 13
Calcium phosphate, with a little calcium fluoride.....	53.04
Calcium carbonate.....	11.30
Magnesium phosphate.....	1.16
Soda, with a little common salt.....	1.20
	100.00

In the other vertebrates the proportions are slightly different.

3. Palæont.: Excepting teeth, no part of a vertebrate animal is more indestructible than bones, and these are so correlated to the teeth, digestive organs, external covering, &c., that in many cases the finding of a single bone will enable a skilled anatomist to reconstruct the whole animal.

4. Music. Pl. (Bones): Four pieces of bone taken from the ribs of horses or oxen, and struck together for the purpose of marking time in accompaniment to the voice or an instrument. Sometimes only two bones are used, or in lieu of these two small wooden maces. The instrument is probably of African origin. It existed in Egypt as far back as the Theban era. Negro minstrels in this country still patronize it. Country people call such bones knickknackers (q. v.).

"Let's have the tongs and the bones."—Shakesp.: Midsummer Night's Dream, iv. 1.

*5. Weaving: A kind of bobbins made of troller bones for weaving bonelace (q. v.). (Johnson.)

6. Art: Bones are used in many of the arts. (See the example.)

"Mechanically considered, the uses of bone are for turning, inlaying, handles of knives and tools, billiard balls, scales, etc. The term includes the ordinary bones of the body, and also the tusks and teeth of the elephant, hippopotamus, walrus, and whale. Bone is also, when deprived of its animal matters by distillation, used as a defecating, bleaching, and filtering material in the treatment of syrups and distilled liquors, and in the purification of water. Bone-black is also used as a pigment in making printer's ink. Bone, while yet fresh, is used by pastry-cooks to prepare a clear and rigid jelly. Bone is used by steel-workers as a carbon in the hardening of steel. Whalebone (so called) is not a bone, but partakes of the nature of horn. Bone is used by husbandmen as a manure. Bones blanched in an open fire, removing the carbon, yield a powder which is used in making the cupels of the assayer, in making phosphorus, and as a polishing material."—Knight: Pract. Dict. Mechan.

B. As adjective: Of or belonging to bone.

"Item, a bone coffre, and in it a grete cors of gold, with four precious stans, and a chenyne of gold."—Coll. Inventories (A. 1488), p. 12. (Jamieson.)

C. In compos.: Made of bones, in the bones, containing bones, or in any other way pertaining to bones. (See the compounds.)

bone-ace, s.

Card-playing: A game at cards in which he who has the highest card turned up to him wins the "bone," i. e., half the stake.

bone-ache, *bone-ach, s. An ache or pain in one or more of the bones, specially one produced by syphilis.

"... incurable bone-ache."—Shakesp.: Troilus and Cressida, v. 1.

bone-ash, s. [Eng. bone; and ash.]

Commerce: Ash made of calcined bones. It consists chiefly of tricalcic phosphate $\text{Ca}_3(\text{PO}_4)_2$, mixed with about one-fourth its weight of magnesium phosphate and calcic carbonate.

bone-bed, Axmouth bone-bed, s.

Geol.: A dark-colored bed, so called from the remains of saurians and fishes with which it abounds. It was formerly supposed to be the lowest stratum of the Lias, but Sir Philip Egerton showed, from the character of the fish remains, that it was really referable to the Upper Trias. Its characteristic fishes are Acrodus, Hybodus, Gyrolepis, and Saurichthys.

bone-black, s.

Comm.: Animal charcoal. It is obtained by charring bones. It contains about ten per cent. of finely divided carbon disseminated through the porous phosphate of calcium. It has the power of absorbing gases, removing the coloring matter and alkaloids, &c., from their solutions. It is used to disinfect ulcers, &c., also to decolorize sugar and other organic substances; its properties can be restored by heating it to redness in closed vessels. If treated with dilute hydrochloric acid, HCl, for two days the mineral matters are removed, and a black pulverent substance is obtained, which has been used as an antidote in cases of poisoning with vegetable alkaloids.

¶ Among the volatile products obtained when bones are calcined in close vessels is a peculiar oil, which is burned in lamps in close chambers; while the soot which accumulates on the sides is collected and forms the pigment known, according to quality, as bone-black or ivory-black.

Bone-black cleaning apparatus: A device for purifying, screening, and cooling bone-black after treatment in the revivifying retort.

Bone-black cooler: An apparatus for cooling animal charcoal after its removal from the furnace.

Bone-black furnace: A form of furnace for revivifying bone-black.

Bone-black kiln: A chamber or retort mounted in a furnace for re-burning bone-black to remove impurities with which it has become saturated or impregnated during its use as a defecator and filtering material.

bone-breaker, s. [Eng. bone; and breaker. In Ger. beinbrecher.]

1. Gen.: A person who or a thing which breaks bones.

bone-brown, s.

Painting: A brown pigment made by roasting bones or ivory till it assumes a brown hue.

bone-cartilage, s.

Physiol.: The soft, glue-like substance or animal matter of bone left after the removal of the earths. Called also osseine (q. v.).

bone-cave, s. A cave in which bones of extinct animals are found, sometimes together with the bones of man, or other traces of his contemporaneous existence.

bone-dust, s. Bones ground into dust to be made into manure.

bone-earth, s. The earthy residuum left after bones have been calcined. It is also called bone-ash. It consists chiefly of tricalcic phosphate, mixed with about one-fourth its weight of magnesian phosphate and calcic carbonate.

"As the phosphate of lime is the same as bone-earth."—Todd & Bowman: Physiol. Anat., vol. i., ch. i., p. 40.

bone-elevator, s.

Surgery: A lever for raising a depressed portion of bone, as, for instance, a part of the cranium.

bone-grease, s. The oily substance produced from bones which are bruised and stewed on a slow fire.

bone-manure, s. Manure made of bones.

bone-mill, s. A mill for grinding bones for making either manure or bone-black. Bone-grinding is effected by passing the bones through a series of toothed rollers arranged in pairs, the rollers being toothed or serrated in different degrees of fineness, and riddles are provided for sifting the bones into sizes, and they are then sold as inch, three-quarters, half-inch and dust.

bone-oil, bone oil, s.

Comm.: An oil, called also Dippel's Oil (Oleum animale Dippelii), obtained by the dry distillation of bones and other animal matter. It contains the following organic tertiary bases: Pyridine, $\text{C}_5\text{H}_5\text{N}$; Picoline, $\text{C}_6\text{H}_7\text{N}$; Lutidine, $\text{C}_7\text{H}_9\text{N}$; Collidine, $\text{C}_8\text{H}_{11}\text{N}$; Parvoline, $\text{C}_9\text{H}_{13}\text{N}$; Coridine, $\text{C}_{10}\text{H}_{15}\text{N}$; Rubidine, $\text{C}_{11}\text{H}_{17}\text{N}$; and Viridine, $\text{C}_{12}\text{H}_{19}\text{N}$. Some of these bases have been obtained synthetically; the more important will be hereafter described.

bone-seed, s. The Osteospermum, a genus of plants belonging to the order Asteraceæ (Compositæ).

bone-spavin, s.

Farr.: A bony excrescence or hard swelling on the inside of the hock of a horse's leg.

book, *bōoke, *bōke, *bōc (Eng.), beuk, buik, buke, buk (Scotch), s. & a. [A. S. bōc = a book, a volume, a writing, an index; Goth. boka; Icel. bók; Sw. bok; Dan. bog; Dut. boek; O. S. buok; (N. H.) Ger. buch; M. H. Ger. buoch; O. H. Ger. pohha. From A. S. bōc=a beech; Ger. buche=a beech (BEECH), because Anglo-Saxon and German books were originally made of beechen boards.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) Of things material: An article of manufacture, of which a series of forms have existed in bygone ages, but which at present consists of a number of sheets of printed paper stitched together, pressed and covered with boards. [BOOKBINDING.]

¶ The first books were probably of various and diverse types. The Koran is said to have been written on shoulder-blades of sheep. The Anglo-Saxon books were originally written on pieces of beechen board. Boards of other trees were doubtless used in other countries, as was the inner bark of trees. At a remote period of antiquity the papyrus [PAPYRUS] displaced its rivals, and so well held its place as to have given rise to the word paper. Parchment, called from Pergamos, where it was first made, arose about B. C. 200. [PARCHMENT.] A nearly and persistent form of book was a roll of papyrus or other material. Jeremiah's book was such a roll (Jer. xxxvi. 4, 14, 23). The charred books found in Herculaneum were also rolls. This form of book is commemorated in the common word volume, which is from Lat. volumen=a thing rolled or wound up. [VOLUME.] When books were transcribed by hand they were necessarily very expensive. Plato is said to have given about $1,560 for one, Aristotle about $2,900 for another; Alfred the Great, about the year 872, an estate for a third volume. Printing cheapened books to an incalculable extent, though heavy prices are still paid for rare and large or copiously-illustrated works. Thus Machlin's Bible, illustrated by Tomkins, was valued at $2,625, and a superb Bible, in fifty-four large folio volumes, with 7,000 illustrations, was raffled off for tickets in the aggregate amounting to $25,000. A collection of books is called a library. [LIBRARY.]

"Books! Those poor bits of rag-paper with black ink on them."—Carlyle: Heroes, Lecture v.

¶ It is not needful that a printed work shall have many pages to constitute a book; in nursery literature a single page will be enough.

"A book (to please us at a tender age
'Tis called a book, though but a single page)."—Cowper: Tirocinium.

¶ So far as known, the first book ever written in English was a poem—"a Paraphrase," as it is called—of the creation, the war in heaven, and of the fall of Satan, about the year 657. The author was Cædmon, a convert from paganism to Christianity. After the Norman conquest there seem to have been no books written in English until the reign of King John, which began in 1199. During this reign Layamon, a priest of Worcestershire, wrote a remarkable poem of 32,250 lines, called "Brut."

(2) Of things intellectual:

(a) A written or printed literary composition contained in a roll, or collection of pages in boards, as described under No. 1.

(b) Any writing or paper. (In the subjoined example it means articles of agreement.)

"By that time will our book, I think, be drawn."

Shakesp.: Henry IV., Pt. I., iii. 1.

(c) Pre-eminently the Bible.

"I'll be sworn on a book . . ."

Shakesp.: Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 4.

†(d) An account book.

(e) A division of a treatise on any subject. Books in this sense are often subdivided into chapters. Thus in the contents of J. Stuart Mill's Logic, 2d ed. (1846), the leading divisions and subdivisions are: Book I. Of Names and Propositions. (This is divided into eight chapters.) Book II. Of Reasoning (six chapters). Book III. Of Induction (thirteen chapters).

(f) Whist: The first six tricks taken by either party.

(g) Other card-playing: The cards remaining in the pack after all the players have received their "hands."

2. Fig.: Anything presenting a more or less close analogy either to the material part of a book or to the writing or printing which it contains. Specially—

(1) Heaven.

"Paraventure in thilke large booke,
What that is cleped the heven, i-write was."

Chaucer: Canterbury Tales, 4,610-11.

(2) (See 3, Special phrases.)

3. In special phrases:

(1) A book of remembrance was written. Fig.: There was undying remembrance. (Malachi iii. 16.)

(2) God's book: The Bible.

"Such as by God's book are adjudged to death."

Shakesp.: 2 Henry VI., ii. 3.

(3) In the books of, or in the good books of: Remembered for something of a favorable or pleasant character.

"I was so much in his books that at his decease he left me his lamp."—Addison.

(4) In the bad books of: Remembered for something for which offense has been taken.

(5) The book: The Bible.

"Some herds, weel learn'd upo' the beuk."

Burns: To Wm. Simpson. (Postscript.)

(6) The book of life. Fig.: A record conceived of as existing in which are written the names of those who shall ultimately obtain eternal life. (Phil. iv. 3; Rev. iii. 5; xiii. 8, &c.)

(7) Without book:

(a) Without being compelled to have recourse to a book to help the memory.

"Her friend Miss Kitty repeated, without book, the eight best lines of the play."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xviii. (Note.)

(b) Without fortifying the assertion by the aid of books; without authority, loosely, inaccurately.

(8) To bring to book: To call to account.

II. Technically:

1. Mercantile affairs (pl. Books): A register of financial transactions, as of debts, assets, &c. Merchants, traders and other persons, who are desirous of understanding their affairs, and explaining them when necessary, keep: 1, a day-book; 2, a journal; 3, a ledger; 4, a letter-book; 5, an invoice book; 6, a cash-book; 7, a bill-book; 8, a bank-book, and 9, a check-book. Commercial books are kept by single or by double entry. [BOOKKEEPING.]

2. Eng. Law. Plur. (the books): All the volumes which contain authentic reports of decisions in English law from the earliest times till now. [REPORTS.] (Wharton.)

3. Gilding: A package of gold-leaf consisting of twenty-five leaves, each 3¼ x 3 inches square; they are inserted between leaves of soft paper rubbed with red chalk to prevent adherence.

B. As adjective: In any way pertaining, relating to, or connected with a book.

1. Gen.: In some one of the foregoing senses.

Bookbinding: A machine which acts as a substitute for the hammer in rounding the back of a book after cutting the edge and ends. It is usually performed upon the book before the cover is put on. In one form of machine, the book is run between rollers, being pressed forward by a rounded strip which rests against the front edge and determines the form thereof. In another form, the book is clamped and a roller passed over the back under great pressure. Another form of machine is for molding the back-covers of books to a given curvature, by pressing between a heated cylinder of a given radius and a bed-plate whose curvature corresponds to the presser.

book-binder, s. [BOOKBINDER.]

book-bosomed, a. Having a book in the bosom.

"As the corslet off he took,
The Dwarf espied the Mighty Book!

2. Of things: A contrivance of the nature of a temporary cover, for holding together newspapers, pamphlets, or similar articles.

†book'-bind-ēr-ŷ, s. [Eng. book; bindery.] A place for binding books.

book'-bind-īng, s. [Eng. book; binding.] The art of stitching or otherwise fastening together and covering the sheets of paper or similar material composing a book. The edge of a modern book constituted by the margin of the paper composing it is called the binding-edge.

† When books were literal "volumes," or rolls, the way of "binding" them, if it could be so called, or at least of keeping them together, was to unroll them from one cylinder and roll each again, as it was perused, on another. When books became separate folios the first method of dealing with them seems to have been the tying them together by a string passed through a hole at the margin of the pile. This is still done in the south of India and Ceylon with writings on talipot or other palm leaves. The holding together of folios of a literary man's manuscript by a small clasp at one edge is an essentially similar device. The present method of binding seems to have been invented by or under Attalus, king of Pergamus, or his son Eumenes, about 200 B. C. The oldest bound book known—the binding was ornamental—is the volume of St. Cuthbert, about A. D. 650. Ivory was used for book covers in the eighth century; oak in the ninth. The Book of Evangelists, on which the English kings took their coronation oath, was bound in oak boards, A. D. 1100. Velvet, silk, hogskin and leather were used as early as the fifteenth century; needlework binding began in 1471; vellum, stamped and ornamented, about 1510; leather about the same date, and calf in 1550. Cloth binding superseded the paper known as "boards" in 1823; india-rubber backs were introduced in 1841, tortoise shell sides in 1856.

The chief processes of bookbinding are the following: Folding the sheets; gathering the consecutive signatures; rolling the packs of folded sheets; sewing, after saw-cutting the backs for the cords; rounding the backs and gluing them; edge cutting; binding, securing the book to the sides; covering the sides and back with leather, muslin, or paper, as the case may be; tooling and lettering; and, finally, edge-gilding. Books may be full bound, i. e., with the back and sides leather; or half-bound, that is, with the back leather and the sides paper or cloth.

"About three months after his engagement with De la Roche, Faraday quitted him and bookbinding together."—Tyndall: Frag. of Science, 3d ed., xii. 351.

book'-cāse, s. [Eng. book; case.] A case furnished with shelves for holding books.

"... that celebrated Treatise on Death which, during many years, stood next to the Whole Duty of Man in the bookcases of serious Arminians."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xvii.

book'-kēep-ēr, s. [Eng. book; keeper.] One who, as accountant, secretary, or clerk, keeps books, making the requisite entries in them day by day.

"Here, brother, you shall be the bookkeeper;
This is the argument of that they shew."

Kyd: Spanish Tragedy.

book'-kēep-īng, s. [Eng. book; keeping.]

1. Arithm. & Comm.: The art of keeping books in which pecuniary transactions are so unremittingly and so accurately entered that one is able at any time to ascertain the exact state of his financial affairs, or of any portion of them, with clearness and expedition. The art, in a certain undeveloped state, must have existed from immemorial antiquity, but it received such improvement and impulse at Venice as to make that comparatively modern city to be considered its birthplace. The first known writer on bookkeeping was Lucas di Borgo, who published a treatise on the subject in Italian in 1495. It is generally divided into bookkeeping by single and bookkeeping by double entry. In the former every entry is single, i. e., is placed to the debit or credit of a single account, while in the latter it is double, that is, it has both a debtor and creditor account. In other words, by single entry each transaction is entered only once in the ledger, and by double entry twice. Bookkeeping by single entry is imperfect, and is scarcely fitted even for very limited establishments. Bookkeeping by double entry being first practiced in Venice, Genoa, and the adjacent towns, is often called the Italian method. In bookkeeping by double entry all transactions inward fall under four heads: cash, bills, book-debts and stock. There are, moreover, a cash-book, a bill-book, a book for book-debts—called the ledger—and a book for the record of stock, that is, stock on hand. There are various other books in a large establishment. In smaller establishments it is enough to have a cash-book, a day-book, a journal and a ledger. It is in the ledger that the elaborate classification of all transactions is entered. The ability to make out a balance-sheet is much increased by the simple device of making impersonal entries, that is, entering cash, iron, &c., as if they were mercantile traders, and grouping a number of articles together under the heading sundries. Then there are accounts of the form sundries debtor to cash, or cash debtor to sundries. If a merchant have purchased iron, what he has paid for it is debited to iron, which is expected to meet it when the metal is disposed of, and so with every other expense incurred by the firm for purposes of business. [BILL-BOOK, CASH-BOOK, DAY-BOOK, LEDGER.]

2. Sarcastically: The practice of not returning books which one has borrowed. (Colloq.)

book'-lānd, *böck'-lānd, s. & a. [BOCKLAND.]

book'-lēss, a. [Eng. book; -less.] Without book. Used—

Booming from the sedgy shallow."

Scott: Lady of the Lake, i. 31.

2. To swell with a certain hollow sound.

"Booming o'er his head,

The billows clos'd; he's numbered with the dead."

Young.

II. Naut.: To rush with noise.

¶ To come booming. Of a ship: To make all the sail which she can, in which case she makes a certain amount of noise in cutting through the water.

boom (1), s. [From boom, v. (q. v.) In Wel. bump=bymian=a hollow sound (BUMP); bumbwr=a murmur, a roar.] A deep hollow sound like that of a cannon, the ocean, or the voice of the bittern

"Hark! 'tis the boom of a heavy gun."

Mackenzie: Fair Maid of Cabul.

boom (2) (Eng.), bolme (O. Scotch), s. & a. [Dut. boom=a tree, a pole, a bar, beam, or boom; Sw. bom=a bar; Dan. bom=a bar to shut a passage, a barricade, a turnpike, a boom; Ger. baum= (1) a tree, (2) a beam, (3) a bar, a boom.] [BEAM.]

A. As substantive:

I. Nautical:

*1. A boom, a waterman's pole. (O. Scotch.)

2. A boom consisting of a pole with bushes, baskets, or other conspicuous thing at the top, set up in a river or harbor, and designed to mark where the channel is sufficiently deep to admit the passage of vessels.

3. A long pole or spar run out for the support of a sail. Specialty—

(1) A spar for extending the foot of a fore-and-aft sail.

1. Main Boom. 2. Studding-sail Boom.

"The boom on which a fore-and-aft sail is stretched is commonly provided with jaws, which partially encircle the mast, and are held to it by a half-grommet strung with balls of hard wood to avoid friction."—Knight: Pract. Dict. Mechan.

(2) A spar rigged out from a yard to extend the foot of a studding-sail.

"The fore and main lower yards, and the fore and main topsail yards have studding-sail booms. Each is secured by boom-irons on its yard, and is named from the studding-sail whose foot it stretches. The heads of the studding-sails are bent to studding-sail yards, which are slung from the studding-sail booms and the fore and main top-gallant yard-arms. The stays of these booms are called guys. The ring-tailed boom is rigged out like a studding-sail boom at the end of the spanker-boom."—Knight: Pract. Dict. Mechan.

(3) Plur. (the Booms): The space on the spar-deck, between the fore and main masts, where the boats and spare spars are stowed.

II. Marine Fortif.: A chain or line of connected spars stretched across a river or channel to obstruct navigation, or detain a vessel under the fire of a fort.

"A boom across the river! Why have we not cut the boom in pieces?"—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xii.

III. Lumbering: A spar or line of floating timbers stretched across a river, or inclosing an area of water, to keep saw-logs from floating down the stream.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to or connected with a boom.

boom-irons, s.

Naut.: A flat iron ring on the yard, through which the studding-sail boom travels when being rigged out or in. There being more than one the word is often in the plural. One boom-iron, called the yard-arm iron, is fixed at the end of the yard, and another iron, called the quarter-iron, is placed at three-sixteenths of the length of the yard from the outer end.

boom-jigger, s.

Naut.: A tackle for rigging out or running in a topmast studding-sail boom.

Naut.: A sheet attached to a boom.

bōom'-ŷear-aŋg, s. [Native Australian word.] A missile weapon invented and used by the native Australians, who are generally deemed the lowest in intelligence of any tribe or race of mankind. It is a curved stick, round on one side and flat on the other, about three feet long, two inches wide, and three-quarters of an inch thick. It is grasped at one end and thrown sickle-wise, either upward into the air, or downward so as to strike the ground at some distance from the thrower. In the first case it flies with a rotary motion, as its shape would indicate, and after ascending to a great height in the air, it suddenly returns in an elliptical orbit to a spot near its starting-point. On throwing it downward to the ground, it rebounds in a straight line, pursuing a ricochet motion until it strikes the object at which it is thrown. The most singular curve described by it is when it is projected upward at an angle about 45°, when its flight is always backward, and the native who throws it stands with his back to the object he intends to hit. (Knight.)

bōom'-ŷŋg, pr. par., a. & s. [BOOM, v.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid,
When booming billows closed above my head."

Pope.

C. As substantive: The act of emitting a deep hollow sound or roar; also the sound thus emitted.

"... the distant booming of cannon was heard."

Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xx.

bōom'-kĭn, s. [BUMKIN (Naut..)] bōon (1) (Eng.), bōon, bāne, bēen (Scotch), s. [Gael. & Ir. bunach=coarse, low; from bun=a stump, a root; Wel. bōn=stem, base, or stick.] The refuse from dressed flax. The internal woody portion or pith of flax, which is disorganized by retting, the binding mucilage being softened by fermentation. The boon is partially removed in grassing, and together with the shives is completely eliminated from the hair or fiber in the subsequent operations of braking and scutching.

bōon (2), boone, bowne, bone, s. [Icel. bón=a boon; Sw. & Dan. bøn; A. S. bēn=a prayer.]

*1. A prayer, a petition, an entreaty to God or man.

"He seyde, 'Brother Gamelyn, aske me thy boone,

And loke thou me blame but I graunte sone.'"

Chaucer: Canterbury Tales, 153-4.

2. A favor. (With the sense partly derived from French bon=good, advantage, profit.) (Skeat.) [Boon, a.]

"Vouchsafe me, for my meed, but one fair look;

A smaller boon than this I cannot beg."

Shakespeare: Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 4.

*3. A service done by a tenant to his lord.

boon-dinner, s. The dinner given on the harvest-field to a band of reapers. (Scotch.)

"The youths and maidens—gathering round a small knoll by the stream, with bare head and obedient hand, waited a serious and lengthened blessing, from the good-man, of the boon-dinner."—Blackwood Magazine, July, 1820, p. 375.

bōon (3), s. The same as BONE (q. v.). (Prologue to the Knights Tale, 546.)

boon (1), a. [BOUND.]

†bōon (2), a. [From Fr. bon=good.] Kind, bountiful.

"Satiated at length,

And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,

Thus to herself she pleasing began."

Milton: Paradise Lost, bk. ix.

¶ Used specially in the phrase a boon companion.

"To one of his boon companions, it is said, he tossed a pardon for a rich traitor across the table during a revel."

Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. v.

[Fr. botte = a boot, a bunch, a bundle, a heap, a barrel, butt, &c.; Prov., Sp. & Port. bota = a leather bottle, a butt, a boot; Ital. botte = a cask, a vessel, boots (BUTT). In Gael. bōt = a boot; Wel. botas, botasan, botasen = a buskin, a boot, but probably these are from English.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of an article of dress or what relates to it:

(1) Of things: One of a pair of coverings for the lower extremities of the body, differing from shoes in reaching a greater or lesser distance above the ankle.

"Shew'd him his room, where he must lodge that night, Pull'd off his boots, and took away the light."

Milton: On the University Carrier.

† A knight of the boot: A sarcastic appellation for a sporting gentleman of position in rural society, but unrefined, who goes out booted to hunt and, still booted, enters the drawing-room after his hard ride.

"These carpets so soft to the foot,
Caledonia's traffic and pride!
Oh spare them, ye knights of the boot,
Escaped from a cross country ride!"

Cowper: Gratitude.

(2) Of persons (pl.): One whose business it is to black the boots of the guests at a hotel.

2. Of a boot like instrument of torture: An instrument of torture used in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries with the view of extorting confessions from accused persons.

(a) *Generally plural (boots, bootes):

"Lastly, he (Doctor Fian, alias John Cunningham) was put to the most severe and cruel pain in the world, called the boot, who after he had received three strokes," &c.—
"Then was he with all convenient speed, by commandment, conveyed againe to the torment of the bootes, wherein he continued a long time, and did abide so many blowes in them that his legges were crasht and beaten together as small as might bee, and the bones and flesh so bruised that the bloud and marrow spouted forth in great abundance; whereby they were made unserviceable forever."—
News from Scotland, declaring the damnable Life of Doctor Fian, 1591.

(b) Sometimes in the singular:

"... those fiery Covenanters who had long, in defiance of sword and carbine, boot and gibbet, worshiped their Maker after their own fashion in caverns and on mountain tops."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

II. Technically:

1. Boots and shoes: The covering for the feet and lower part of the legs.

2. Coach-making:

(1) The space between the coachman and the coach.

(2) The part in front and rear of a coach immediately adjacent to where the receptacles for baggage exist.

† Trench quotes an example from Reynolds' God's Revenge against Murther, bk. i., hist. 1, to show that the "boot," now ordinarily abandoned to servants and other persons of humble rank, was formerly the chosen seat of the more dignified passengers.

(3) The receptacle for baggage, &c., at either end of a coach.

3. Liquor traffic: A leathern case in which to put a filled bottle, so as to guard against accident when corking it.

2. Fig., in special phrases:

(a) To play booty: To play dishonestly, with the intention of losing a game.

"We understand what we ought to do, but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves; our consciences direct us one way, our corruptions hurry us another."—L'Estrange.

(b) To write booty: To write in such a way as intentionally to fail in gaining one's professed aim.

"I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think that I write booty."—Dryden.

¶ Precise meaning of booty: Crabb thus distinguishes between booty, spoil, and prey: "The first two are used as military terms, or in attacks on an enemy; the latter in cases of particular violence. The soldier gets his booty; the combatant his spoils; the carnivorous animal his prey. Booty respects what is of personal service to the captor; spoils whatever serves to designate his triumph; prey includes whatever gratifies the appetite and is to be consumed. When a town is taken, soldiers are too busy in the work of destruction and mischief to carry away much booty; in every battle the arms and personal property of the slain enemy are the lawful spoils of the victor; the hawk pounces on his prey, and carries him up to his nest. Greediness stimulates to take booty; ambition produces an eagerness for spoils; a ferocious appetite impels to a search for prey." (Crabb: Eng. Syn.)

bōowe, s. [BOUGH.] (Chaucer: Canterbury Tales, The Kn. Tale, 2,059.)

bōoze, bōoše, bōuse, v. i. [From Dut. buizen (Mahn); Ger. busen, barsen (Mahn), büchsen; from büchse=box.] [Box.] To tiddle, to drink to excess. (Vulgar.)

bōoz-ēr, bōoş-ēr, s. [Eng. booz(e); -er.] One who tipples or drinks to excess.

bōoz'-īng, bōoş'-īng, pr. par. & a. [BOOZE.]

"... a boozing clown who had scarcely literature enough to entitle him to the benefit of clergy."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxi.

boozing-ken, s. A slang term for a drinking-shop.

bōoz'-ŷ, bōoş'-ŷ, bouş'-ŷ, a. [From booze, v., and suff. -y.] A little intoxicated, somewhat elevated or excited with liquor, but not wholly under its influence.

bō-peēp, bō-peēpe, bō-pepe, s. [From bo, an unmeaning word, and peep=look.]

1. Lit.: A children's game, in which the performers look out from behind anything and then draw back, as if frightened to show face longer. This is done with the intention of impressing each other with a moderate amount of fright. It is the same as Scotch bokeik and keikbo (q. v.).

2. Figuratively:

(1) To rush out of a hiding-place in battle and then retreat again promptly in flight. Used—

(a) Of warriors:

"Rivers,
That serve instead of peaceful barriers,
To part the engagements of their warriors,
Where both from side to side may skip,
And only encounter at bopeep."—Hudibras.

(b) Of the devil:

"There the devil plays at bopeep, puts out his horns to do mischief, then shrinks them back for safety."—Dryden.

(2) To appear as if in a place and then withdraw from it, leaving spectators deceived.

"He sayth that elles we make the angell a lyer, that sayde he is not here, and also that els we make as though Chrystes bodye in hys ascencion did not goe vpe in the cloude into heauen from the earth, but onely lydde hymselfe in the cloude, and played bopepe, and taryed beneath still."—Sir T. More: Works, p. 841.

†bör'-a-ble, a. [Eng. bor(e); able.] That may be bored.

bör-a'-chī-ō, s. [Sp. borracha=a leathern bottle; borracho=drunk.]

*1. A bottle or cask.

*2. A drunkard.

"How you stink of wine! D'ye think my niece will ever endure such a borachio! You're an absolute borachio."—Congreve.

bör-äc'-īc, a. [In Fr. boracique, from Lat. borax, genit. boracis.] The same as BORIC (q. v.).

boracic acid, s.

1. Chem.: An acid, now called BORIC ACID (q. v.).
2. Min.: Sassolite (Dana). Sassoline (Brit. Mus. Cat.). [SASSOLITE.]

bör-a'-çite, s. [In Ger. borazit; Lat. borax, genit. boracis; and suff. -ite, Min. (q. v.).]

Min.: An isometric tetrahedral mineral; hardness 4.5 when massive, but 7 in crystals; specific gravity, 2.9; luster, vitreous; color, white or grayish, yellowish and greenish. It varies from being subtransparent to translucent. It is pyroelectric. Composition: Boron, 58.45-69.77; magnesia, 23.80-31.39; sesquioxide of iron, 0.32-1.59; chloride of magnesia, 9.97-11.75; and water, 0-6.20. Boracite is (1) ordinarily either crystallized or massive, or (2) it is iron-boracite. Found in Germany, France, &c. (Dana.)

bör-a'-coūs, a. [From Lat. borax, genit. boracis (q. v.), and suff. -ous.] Consisting in part of borax; derived from borax.

†bör'-age (age as īg) (1), s. [A corruption of borax (q. v.).]

borage-grot, s.

Numis.: A groat or fourpenny piece of a particular description, formerly current in Scotland.

"Item the auld Englis grot sall pass for xvid., the borage-grot as the new grot."

bör'-age (age as īg) (2), s. [In Ger. borago; Dut. bernagie; Fr. bourrache; Sp. borraja; Port. borragem; Ital. borragine; Pol. borak.] [BORAGO.]

Bot.: The English name of the genus Borago. [BORAGO.] The common borage is an exceedingly hispid plant, with large, brilliant, blue flowers, having their stamens exserted. It was once regarded as a cordial; the young leaves may be used as a salad or potherb, and the flowers form an ingredient in cool tankards.

bör'-age-wörts (age as īg), s. pl. [Eng., &c., borage, and suffix -worts.]

Bot.: The English name of the botanical order Boraginaceæ (q. v.).

bör-äg'-īn-a-çē'-æ, s. pl. [Lat. borago, gen. boraginis, and -aceæ, nom. fem. pl. of adj. suffix -accus.]

Bot. (Borageworts): An order of plants placed by Lindley under his 48th or Echeal Alliance. They have monopetalous corollas, generally with five, but sometimes with four, divisions, five stamens, a four-parted, four-seeded ovary, producing, when ripe, four nuts distinct from each other. Leaves generally very rough. While the five stamens ally them to Solanaceæ, Convolvulaceæ, and other allied orders, the four seeds bring them near Labiatae. They are natives principally of the temperate parts of the northern hemisphere. Six hundred species were known in 1847. The best known species of this order are Echium, Pulmonaria, Lithospermum, Mertensia, Borago, Symphytum, Lycopsis, Anchusa, Myosotis, Asperugo, Echinopspermum, and Cynoglossum.

bör-a'-gīn'-ē-ōūs, a. [Lat. borago, genit. boraginis, and Eng. suff. -ous.] Pertaining or relating to the Boraginaceæ, or to the structure by which they are characterized.

bör-ä'-gō, s. [Of doubtful etymology. It has been brought from Latin cor=the heart, altered into bor, and ago, to bring, meaning the bringer of heart or courage. Again, it has been derived from Celtic borrach=a courageous or noble person. Or from L. Lat. borra, burra=rough hair, from its roughness (Skeat).] [BORAGE.]

Bot. (Borage): A genus of plants, the typical one of the order Boraginaceæ (Borageworts). It has a rotate calyx, its throat closed with five teeth, exserted stamens, with bifid filaments, the inner branch bearing the anther.

Bör'-ak, s. [See ALBORAK.]

bör'-a-mēz, s. The same as BAROMETZ (q. v.).

bör-as'-sūs, s. [From Gr. borassos=the fruit of a palm-tree.]

Bot.: A genus of palms, constituting the type of the section Borasseæ. It contains the Borassus flabelliformis, or Fan-leaved Borassus, or Palm; called also the Palmyra or Brab-tree. It grows in the East Indies, rising to the height of about thirty feet. It delights in elevated and hilly situations. The fruit is about the size and shape of a child's head. Wine and sugar are made from the sap of the trunk.

bör-äte, s. [Eng. bor(ic), and suff. -ate (Chem.).] [BORIC ACID.]

bör-äx, s. [In Fr. borax; Sp. borrax; Ital. bor-race; Arab. burag; from baraga=to shine.]

1. Chem.: Biborate of sodium, sodiumpyroborate, $\text{Na}_2\text{B}_4\text{O}_7$. It is found native in Thibet, California, and Peru, and is called tincal; it is also obtained by boiling the crude Tuscan boric acid with half its weight of Na_2CO_3 . It crystallizes at 79° in octahedra, $\text{Na}_2\text{B}_4\text{O}_7 \cdot 5\text{H}_2\text{O}$; and below 56° in monoclinic prisms, $\text{Na}_2\text{B}_4\text{O}_7 \cdot 10\text{H}_2\text{O}$. When heated in the air it swells up and loses its water, forming a spongy mass. The aqueous solution of borax has a slight alkaline reaction, turning yellow turmeric paper brown.

2. Phar.: Borax acts as a mild alkali on the alimentary canal and produces diuresis; it has a peculiar local sedative action on the mucous membranes, and is used as a gargle in aphthous conditions of the tongue and throat, and in cases of mercurial salivation. It is an antiseptic of no mean value, partaking in this respect of the nature of BORIC ACID (q. v.).

3. Manuf.: Borax is used in the process of soldering oxidizable metals; being sprinkled over their surface it fuses and dissolves the oxide which would prevent adhesion. It is used for fixing colors on porcelain.

"Boras, ceruce, ne oille of tartre noon."

Chaucer: C. T., Prolog., 630.

4. Mineralogy: A monoclinic, rather brittle, sweetish alkaline mineral, with a hardness of 2-2.5, a sp. gr. of 1.716, a vitreous, resinous, or earthy luster, a grayish, bluish, or greenish-white color. Composition: Boric acid, 36.6; soda, 16.2; water, 47.2. It has been called tincal, borate of soda, chrysocolla, &c. Found first in a salt lake in Thibet, and afterward in Ceylon, California, Canada, Peru, &c.

borax beads, s.

Chem.: "Beads" made of borax. They are used in blowpipe analysis to distinguish the oxides of the various metals, and to test minerals. A piece of platinum wire is bent to form a small loop at one end; this is heated to redness and dipped in powdered borax. The adhering borax is heated in the flame to drive off the water; it then forms a colorless transparent bead. A minute fragment of the substance to be tested is placed on it, and it is heated in the blowpipe flame till it dissolves. It gives a characteristic color in the reducing and in the oxidizing blowpipe flame.

Reducing flame: Colorless—Silicates of earth metals; Al_2O_3 , SnO_2 ; alkaline earths, earths, lanthanum, and cerium oxides, tantalic acid, manganic oxide, didymium oxide. Yellow to brown—Tungstic acid, titanitic acid, molybdic acid; and vanadic acid, when hot. Red—Suboxide of copper, Cu_2O . Green— Fe_2O_3 , uranic oxide, chromic oxide; and vanadic acid when cold. Gray— Ag_2O , ZnO , CdO , PbO , Bi_2O_3 , Sb_2O_5 , tellurous salts and NiO .

Oxidizing flame: Colorless bead—Silicates, alumina, stannic oxide, alkaline earths; Ag_2O , Ta , NiO , Te , salts; titanitic acid, tungstic acid, molybdic acid, ZnO , CdO , PbO , Bi_2O_3 , Sb_2O_5 . Yellow to brown— Fe_2O_3 , uranic oxide; vanadic oxide when hot. Red— Fe_2O_3 , cerium oxide, and oxide of nickel when cold. Violet—Mn salts, didymium oxide; and a mixture of CoO and NiO . Blue—Cobalt oxide (CoO), copper oxide (CuO) when cold. Green—Chromium oxide (Cr_2O_3), vanadic acid when cold, CuO when hot; and Fe_2O_3 , containing CuO or CoO .

bör-bön'-ī-ä, s. [From Gaston de Bourbon, Duke of Orleans, son of Henry IV. of France, a patron of botany.]

Bot.: A papilionaceous genus of plants containing about thirteen species, all from South Africa; yellow flowers.

bor'-bör-ūs, s. [From Gr. borboros=slime, mud, mire,] Entom.: A genus of two-winged flies belonging to the family Muscidae. The species are small insects, and frequent cucumber-frames, dung-heaps, and marshy spots.

bor'-bör-ŷgm, bor-bör-ŷg'-mūs, s. [In Fr. borborygme; from Gr. borborygmōs=a rumbling in the bowels; borboryzō=to have a rumbling in the bowels; from the sound.]

Old Med.: A rumbling in the bowels. (Glossog. Nov., 2d ed.)

"He had nane sa familiar to hym, as fīdlaris, bordellaris, makerellis, and gestouris."—Bellend.: Cron., bk. v., ch. i.

bör'-dēl'-lō, s. [BORDEL.]

bor'-dēr, bör'-doure, bör'-dure, s. & a. [From Fr. bordure (Littre); from Fr. border=to border, to edge; Low Lat. bordura=a margin. Compare Sw. brädd=brim, margin, brink; Dut. boord=border, edge, brim, . . .] [BOARD.]

A. As substantive:

1. Ordinary Language: The brim, edge, margin, or boundary line of anything. Spec.—

1. Of earthenware, a looking-glass, a picture, &c.: The brim, the margin, the frame, or anything else surrounding it.

"They have looking-glasses bordered with broad borders of crystal, and great counterfeit precious stones."—Bacon.

2. Of a garment: The edge or hem, sometimes ornamented with needlework, or at least of a diverse color from the rest. [BORDURE, 1.]

3. Of a garden, a country, a lake, &c.: Its limit or boundary.

(1) Of a garden: The raised flower or other bed surrounding it.

"All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd."

Waller: On St. James' Park.

(2) Of a country: Its confine, its limit, its boundary line, or the districts in the immediate vicinity.

"Slowly and with difficulty peace was established on the border."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

(3) Of a lake: Its bank or margin.

"It was situated on the borders of an extensive but shallow lake, . . ."—Darwin: Voyage round the World (ed. 1870), ch. vi., p. 114.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāl, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camel, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marīne; gō, pōt, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rūle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

¶ (1) Crabb thus distinguishes between border, edge, rim or brim, brink, margin, and verge: "Of these terms, border is the least definite point, edge the most so; rim and brim are species of edge; margin and verge are species of border. A border is a strip, an edge is a line. The border lies at a certain distance from the edge; the edge is the exterior termination of the surface of any substance. Whatever is wide [thick] enough to admit of space round its circumference may have a border; whatever tapers to a narrow extended surface has an edge. Many things may have both a border and an edge; of this description are caps, gowns, carpets, and the like; others have a border but no edge, as lands, and others have an edge but no border, as a knife or table. A rim is the edge of any vessel; the brim is the exterior edge of a cap; a brink is the edge of any precipice or deep place; a margin is the border of a book or a piece of water; a verge is the extreme border of a place."

(2) Border, boundary, frontier, and confines are thus discriminated: "These terms are all applied to countries or tracts of land." The "border is the outer edge or tract of land that runs along a country; it is mostly applied to countries running in a line with each other, as the borders of England and Scotland; the boundary is that which bounds or limits, as the boundaries of countries or provinces; the frontier is that which lies in the front or forms the entrance into a country, as the frontiers of Germany or the frontiers of France; the confines are the parts lying contiguous to others, as the confines of different states or provinces. The term border is employed in describing those parts which form the borders, as to dwell on the borders or to run along the borders. The term boundary is used in speaking of the extent or limits of places; it belongs to the science of geography to describe the boundaries of countries. The frontiers are mostly spoken of in relation to military matters, as to pass the frontiers, to fortify frontier towns, to guard the frontiers, or in respect to one's passage from one country to another, as to be stopped at the frontiers. The term confines, like that of borders, is mostly in respect to two places; the border is mostly a line, but the confines may be a point; one therefore speaks of going along the borders, but meeting on the confines. "The term border may be extended in its application to any space, and boundary to any limit. Confines is also figuratively applied to any space included within the confines, as the confines of the grave; precinct is properly any place which is encircled by something that serves as a girdle, as to be within the precincts of a court, that is, within the space which belongs to or is under the control of a court." (Crabb: Eng. Syn.)

II. Technically:

1. Milling: The hoop, rim, or curb around a bed-stone or bedplate, to keep the meal from falling off except at the prescribed gap. Used in gunpowder mills and some forms of grain-grinding mills.

2. Printing:

(1) A type with an ornamental face, suitable for forming a part of a fancy border.

(2) Ornamental work surrounding the text of a page.

3. Locksmithing:

The rim of a lock.

4. Weaving:

(1) That part of the cloth containing the selvage.

(2) Plur. (Borders): A class of narrow textile fabrics designed for edgings and bindings, such as galloons and laces.

5. Her.: Of the form bordure (q. v.).

B. As adjective: In any way connected with the borders. [See the compounds.]

bor'-düre, s. [Fr. bordure.] [BORDER.]

I. Ord. Lang.: An old form of border, s. (q. v.) A hem or border.

" . . . hem or bordure of these clothes, . . ."

Chaucer: Boethius (ed. Morris), p. 6, line 50.

II. Heraldry: The border of an escutcheon. It occupies one-fifth of a shield. It has various significations.

1. It may be the mark of a younger branch of a family.

2. If charged, it may refer to maternal descent. This especially obtains in ancient armory.

3. It may stand for "border company," which should be composed of sixteen pieces, and may imply either augmentation or, in recent heraldry, illegitimacy.

4. It may be an ordinary charge.

¶ In blazoning coats of armor the bordure is placed over all ordinaries except the chief, the quarter, and the canton. It has no diminutive, but may at times be surmounted by another of half its width. When a bordure is bezanté, billetté, or has similar markings, the number of bezants or billets, unless otherwise mentioned, is always eight. (Gloss. of Her.)

bor'-dyn, *boor'-don, *bour'-don, v. i. [BOURDON.] To play, joke. (Prompt. Parv.)

bor'-dÿ-oure, *bor'-dere, s. [From O. Eng. bourdyn (q. v.).]

"Bordyoure, or pleyare (bordere, P.). Lusor, jocator."—Prompt. Parv.

böre, *bor'-ÿ-en, *bor-in, *bor-yn, v. t. & i. [A. S. borian=to bore; Icel. bora; Sw. borä; Dan. bore; Dut. boren; (N. H.) Ger. böhren; O. H. Ger. poran, poron; Lat. foro=to bore. Skeat suggests also a connection with Gr. phar, in pharax=a ravine, and pharynx=the pharynx, the gullet.]

A. Transitive:

1. Lit.: To perforate or make a hole through anything.

(1) To perforate, to make a hole through any hard substance by means of an instrument adapted for the purpose. Used—

(a) Of the action of a gimlet drilling holes in wood, or an analogous but more powerful instrument wrought by machinery perforating iron.

"A man may make an instrument to bore a hole an inch wide, or half an inch, not to bore a hole of a foot,"—Wilkins.

"Mulberries will be fairer if you bore the trunk of the tree through, and thrust into the places bored wedges of some hot trees."—Bacon.

(b) Of the action of a borer perforating the strata of the earth in search of coal or other valuable minerals, for scientific investigation of the succession of strata, or for any purpose.

"I'll believe as soon

This whole earth may be bored, and that the moon

May through the center creep."

Shaksp.: Mid. Night's Dream, iii. 2.

(c) Of the action of a woodpecker's bill, the jaws of an insect, or any similar instrumentality.

(d) Of an energetic person piercing through or penetrating a crowd.

"Consider, reader, what fatigues I've known,

What riots seen, what bustling crowds I bor'd,

How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar'd."

Gay.

(2) To hollow out by means of boring.

"Take the barrel of a long gun, perfectly bored, . . ."—Digby.

(3) To make way by piercing or scraping out

"These diminutive caterpillars are able, by degrees, to pierce or bore their way into a tree, with very small holes; . . ."—Ray.

2. Figuratively:

(1) To weary one out by constant reiteration of a narrative or subject in which one has but slender interest; to fatigue the attention, to weary one.

* (2) To be fool, to trick.

"I am abused, betrayed; I am laughed at, scorned, Baffled and bored, it seems . . ."

Beaumont & Fletcher.

B. Intransitive:

Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) By omitting the objective after the transitive verb: To pierce by boring; as, "the auger bores well."

(2) In its nature intransitive: To be pierced or penetrated by a boring instrument; as, "the wood is hard to bore."

2. Fig.: To push forward.

"Nor southward to the raining regions run,

But boring to the west, and hovering there,

With gaping mouths they draw prolific air."

Dryden.

böre, pret. of v. [BEAR, v.]

"This bore up the patriarchs . . ."—Tillotson (3d ed., 1722), vol. i., ser. xiv.

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

* (1) The instrument with which a hole is bored; a borer. [See etym.]

"So shall that hole be fit for the file, or square bore."—Moxon.

(2) A hole made by boring. Used—

(a) Gen.: Of the hole itself, without reference to its size.

"Into hollow engines long and round,
Thick ramm'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire Dilated, and infuriate." Milton: P. L., bk. vi

(b) Spec.: Of its size or caliber.

"And ball and cartridge sorts for every bore."—Dryden.

"It will best appear in the bores of wind instruments; therefore cause pipes to be made with a single, double, and so on, to a sextuple bore, and mark what tone every one giveth."—Bacon.

(3) A hole made in any other way. Spec.—

(a) A small hole or crevice; a place used for shelter, especially for smaller animals.

"A sonne bem ful bright Schon upon the queene
At a bore."—Sir Tristrem, p. 152.

"Schute was the door: in at a boir I blent."—Palice of Honor, iii. 69.

"And into hols and bors thame hyd."—Burel: Pilg. (Watson's Coll.), ii. 23, 24. (Jamieson.)

(b) A rift in the clouds; a similar open space between trees in a wood. (Scotch.)

"When, glimmering through the groaning trees, Kirk-Alloway seem'd in a bleeze;
Through ilka bore the beams were glancing."—Burns: Tam O'Shanter.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Of things: Importance.

"I have words to speak in thine ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bore of the matter."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, iv. 6.

(2) Of persons or things: A person who wearies one by perpetually calling when there is no time to receive visitors, or by harping on a subject in which one has no interest, or in some similar way. Also a thing similarly wearisome.

3. In special phrases:

¶ (1) A blue bore: An opening in the clouds when the sky is thick and gloomy.

"This style pleased us well. It was the first blue bore that did appear in our cloudy sky."—Baillie: Lett. i. 171.

* (2) The bores of hearing: The ears.

"For mine's beyond beyond—say, and speak thick;
Love's counselor should fill the bores of hearing."—Shakesp.: Cymbel., iii. 2.

II. Technically:

1. Metallurgy:

(1) A tool bored to fit the shank of a forged nail, and adapted to hold it while the head is brought to shape by the hammer. The depression in the face of the bore is adapted to the shape required of the chamfered under part of the head.

(2) The cavity of a steam-engine cylinder, pump-barrel, pipe, cannon, barrel of a fire-arm, &c. In mechanics it is expressed in inches of diameter; in cannon formerly in the weight in pounds of solid round shot adapted thereto, but since the introduction of modern rifled ordnance of the breech loading pattern, the bore of cannon is always expressed in inches of diameter or in the equivalent of inches.

(3) The capacity of a boring tool, as the bore of an auger.

2. Music: The caliber of a wind instrument, as the bore of a flute.

böre (2), s. [Icel. bára=a wave, a billow caused by wind (Wedgwood and Skeat); N. & M. H. Ger. bor; O. H. Ger. por=height, top. Remotely connected with A. S. beran, beoran=to bear.]

Physic. Geog. & Ord. Lang.:

1. A tidal wave running with fearful height and velocity up various rivers. In India it occurs on the Ganges and the Indus, but, according to an "Anglo-Burman," is nowhere better seen than in the Sittang between Rangoon and Moulmein in the Eastern Peninsula. [EAGRE, HYGRE.]

2. Less properly: A very high tidal wave, not, however, so abrupt as in No. 1, seen in the English Channel, the Bay of Fundy, &c. (Dana.) boreal pole, s. The north-pointing pole of the magnet.

Before the boreal blasts the vessels fly."—Pope.

Boreal Province.

Zoölogy: The second of eighteen provinces within which Mr. S. P. Woodward distributed sea and fresh-water mollusca. The Boreal Province extends across the Atlantic from Nova Scotia and Massachusetts to Iceland, the Farøe and Shetland Islands, and along the coast of Norway from North Cape to the Naze. Seventy-five per cent. of the Scandinavian shells are common to Britain, and more than half of the sea-shells found on the coast of Massachusetts, north of Cape Cod, occur also in the North Sea. Some of the principal species are Teredo navalis, Pholas crispata, Mya arenaria, Saxicava rugosa, Tellina solidula, Lucina borealis, Astarte borealis, Cyprina islandica, Leda pygmaea, Nucula tenuis, Mytilus edulis, Modiola modiolus, Pecten islandicus, Ostrea edulis, Anomia ephippium, Terebratulina caput-serpentis, Rhynchonella psittacea, Chiton marmoreus, Dentalium entale, Margarita undulata, Littorina grænlandica, Natica helicoïdes, Scaloria grænlandica, Fusus antiquus, Fusus islandicus, Trophon muricatus, Trophon clathratus, Purpura lapillus, Buccinum undatum. Several genera are now living on the coast of the United States which only occur fossil in England, as Glycymeris, Cardita, &c. (S. P. Woodward: Mollusca.)

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of living beings: A person who or a living being which bores. [II. Zool.]

2. Of things: An instrument used for boring.

"The master-bricklayer must try all the foundations with a borer, such as well-diggers use to try the ground."—Moxon.

II. Technically:

1. Zoölogy:

(1) A name for a worm-like fish, the Myxine glutinosa, called also the Glutinous Hag and the Blind-fish.

(2) A name sometimes given to Terebella, a genus of Annelids.

2. Coopering: A semi-conical tool used to enlarge bung-holes and give them a flare.

¶ Analogous instruments, used in some other trades, are called by the same name.

bör'-ēth-yl, s. [Eng. &c., bor(on); ethyl.]

Chem.: $B(C_2H_5)_3$. It is formed by acting on boric ether ($C_2H_5)_3BO_3$ (a thin, limpid, fragrant liquid, boiling at 119° , decomposed by water), with zinc ethyl. Borethyl is a colorless, pungent, irritating, mobile liquid, sp. gr. 0.696, and boiling at 95° . It is insoluble in water, takes fire in the air spontaneously, burning with green smoky flame. It unites with ammonia.

bör'-ic, a. [In Fr. borique. From Eng. &c., bor(on), and suff. -ic.]

boric acid, boracic acid, s.

1. Chem.: Boric acid, or orthoboric acid, $B(OH)_3$, is formed by dissolving boron trioxide (B_2O_3) in water. It occurs in the steam which issues from volcanic vents in Tuscany called suffioni, or fumaroles. These are directed into artificial lagoons, the water of which becomes charged with boric acid, and it is obtained from it by evaporation. Boric acid is supposed to be formed by the action of water on BN (nitride of boron), which is decomposed by it into boric acid and ammonia. Boric acid crystallizes out in six-sided laminae, which are soluble in hot water and in alcohol; it forms salts and borates, which are very unstable, as $Mg_3(BO_3)_2$ (magnesium orthoborate), being a tribasic acid. Its solution in alcohol burns with a green-edged flame. Boric acid turns litmus paper brown, even in the presence of free hydrochloric acid; the brown color thus formed is turned a dirty blue by caustic soda. Pyroboric acid, $H_2B_4O_7$, is obtained by heating for a long time the crystals of orthoboric acid at $140^\circ C$. Its chief salts are borax, $Na_2B_4O_7$, sodium pyroborate, and $Ca''B_4O_7$, calcium pyroborate, which occurs as the mineral borocalcite. Metaboric acid, $B''O(OH)$, is formed when boric acid is heated to 100° ; it is a white powder. Its salts are called metaborates; as, barium metaborate, $Ba''(BO_2)_2$; and calcium metaborate, $Ca''(BO_2)_2$, a white powder precipitated when $CaCl_2$ is added to a solution of borax; the calcium salt is soluble in acetic acid, and in NH_4Cl .

2. Min.: A mineral, called also Sassolite (q. v.).

3. Pharm.: Boric acid is a most valuable antiseptic, and is particularly useful as a dressing for a wound from which it is probable pyemia will result. It has a very marked effect in subduing the attacks of disease germs on the mucous membranes of the body, and used in due season will avert many evil consequences arising from contact with bacilli.

bör'-ick-ite, s. [From Boricky, who analyzed it.]

Min.: A reddish-brown opaque mineral of waxy luster, occurring reniform or massive. It contains phosphoric acid, 19.35-29.49; sesquioxide of iron, 52.29-52.99; water, 19.06-19.96; lime, 7.29-8.16; and magnesia, 0-0.41. It occurs in Styria and Bohemia. (Dana.) bor'-il-la, s. [Etymology doubtful.]

Metal.: A rich copper ore in dust.

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As substantive:

1. The act, operation, or process of perforating wood, iron, rocks, or other hard substances by means of instruments adapted for the purpose.

"Borynge or percyng. Perforacio."—Prompt. Parv.

färe, fät, färe, amidst, whät, fäll, father; wē, wēt, hère, camēl, hēr, thère; pine, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wöre, wolf, wörk, whō, sōn; müte, cüb, cüre, unite, cūr, rüle, füll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

2. A place made by boring, or where boring operations are in progress.

3. Pl.: Chips or fragments which drop from a hole which is in the process of being bored.

boring and tenoning machine, s.

Wheelwrighting: A machine adapted to bore the holes in the felloes and to cut the tenons on the ends of the spokes.

boring-bar, s.

Metal-working:

1. A bar supported axially in the bore of a piece of ordnance or cylinder, and carrying the cutting-tool, which has a traversing motion, and turns off the inside as the gun or cylinder rotates.

2. A cutter-stock used in other boring-machines, such as those for boring the brasses of pillow-blocks. (Knight.)

boring-bench, s.

Wood-working: A bench fitted for the use of boring machinery or appliances. [BENCH-DRILL.]

boring-bit, s. A tool adapted to be used in a brace. It has various forms, enumerated under the head of BIT (q. v.).

boring-block, s.

Metal-working: A slotted block on which work to be bored is placed.

boring-collar, s. A back-plate provided with a number of tapering holes, either of which may be brought in line with a piece to be bored and which is chucked to the lathe-mandrel. The end of the piece is exposed at the hole to a boring-tool which is held against it. (Knight.)

boring-faucet, s. One which has a bit on its end by which it may cut its own way through the head of a cask.

boring-gage, s. A clamp to be attached to an auger or a bit-shank at a given distance from the point, to limit the penetration of the tool when it has reached the determinate depth.

boring-instruments, s. [BORING-MACHINES.]

boring-lathe, s. A lathe used for boring wheels or short cylinders. The wheel or cylinder is fixed on a large chuck screwed to the mandrel of a lathe.

boring-machines, s. pl. Machines by which holes are made by the revolution of the tool or of the object around the tool, but not including the simple tool itself. Thus an auger, gimlet, awl, or any bit adapted for boring, independently of the machinery for driving it, would not be a boring-machine. A brace is on the dividing line, if such there be, but is not included under the term boring-machines.

boring mollusca, s. The principal boring mollusca are the Teredo, which perforates timber, and Pholas, which bores into chalk, clay, and sandstone. These shells are supposed to bore by mechanical means, either by the foot or by the valves. But certain shells, as Lithodomus, Gastrochaena, Saxicava, and Ungulina, which attack the hardest marble and the shells of other mollusca, have smooth valves and a small foot, and have a limited power of movement—(the Saxicava is even fixed in its crypt by a byssus)—so they have been supposed either to dissolve the rock by chemical means, or else to wear it away with the thickened anterior margins of the mantle. The boring mollusks have been called “stone-eaters” (lithophagi) and “wood-eaters” (xylophagi), and some at least are obliged to swallow the material produced by their operations, though they derive no nourishment from it. No boring mollusk deepens or enlarges its burrow after attaining the full growth usual to its species. The animals do great injury to ships, piers and breakwaters.

boring-rod, s. An instrument used in boring for water, &c. [BORING-MACHINES.]

boring-table, s. The platform of a boring-machine on which the work is laid.

boring-tool, s.

Metal-working: A cutting-tool placed in a cutter-head to dress round holes.

borith, s. [BURYT.] (Bailey.)

börk-hâu-sĩ-a, s. [Named after Moritz Borkhausen, a German, who published a botanical work in 1790.]

Bot.: A genus of plants belonging to the order Asteraceæ (Composites) and the sub-order Ligulifloræ (Cichoraceæ). The three best known of the genus are the species B. foetida, B. taraxacifolia, and B. setosa. They are not common, and no special interest attaches to them.

bor-lā-sĩ-a, s. [From the Rev. Dr. Borlase, F. R. S., an English naturalist and antiquarian, born in Cornwall, England, on February 2, 1695, and died there August 31, 1772.]

Zoöl.: A Ribbon Worm, belonging to the family Nemertidae. It is found on the sea-coast of Europe, is of nocturnal habits, and attains the length of fifteen feet.

börn, börne, *bör-en, *bör-ün, *böre, *ý-böre, pa. par. [BEAR, v.]

I. Of born and the other forms given above: Brought into the world, brought into life, brought forth, produced. (Used either of the simple fact of birth or of the circumstances attendant upon it.)

¶ (1) Formerly all the foregoing forms were used except born, which is modern.

“For he was ybore at Rome, . . .”—Rob. Glouc., p. 90.

“How he had lyued syn he was bore.”

Robt. Manning of Brunne, 5,646.

“Whanne Jhesus was borun in Bethleem, . . .”—Wycliffe (Purvey), Matt. ii. 1.

(2) Now born alone is used, complete distinction in meaning having been established between it and borne II. (2).

“These six were born unto him in Hebron.”—1 Chron. iii. 4.

¶ Special phrase. Born again: Caused to undergo the new birth; regenerated, transformed in character, imbued with spiritual life.

II. Of the forms borne and *born: Carried, supported, sustained.

¶ (1) Formerly: Of the form born, now quite obsolete in this sense.

“ . . . to have born up and sustained themselves so long under such fierce assaults, as Christianity hath done?”—Tillotson (3d ed., 1722), vol. i., ser. xx.

(2) Now: Only of the form borne.

“From a rock of the ocean that beauty is borne—

Now joy to the house of fair Ellen of Lorn!”

Campbell: Glenara.

borne-down, a. Depressed in body, in mind, or in external circumstances. (Used of individuals or of collective bodies.)

“ . . . opprest and borne-down churches.”—Pet. North of Irel. Acts Ass. 1644, p. 215.

börne, s. [A. S. burna; Dut. borne=a stream, a spring. [BURN (2).] A stream; the Scotch call a “burn.”

“Vnder a brode banke, bi a bornes side,

Piers Plow. Vis., Prolog., 8, 9.

borned, *bornyd, pa. par. [BORNYN.] Burnished. (Chaucer.)

“Sheldes fresshe and plates borned bright.”

Lydgate: Story of Thebes, 1,123.

Gold bornyd: Burnished with gold.

bör-nēene, s. [Eng., &c., Borne(o); -ene.] Camphor oil of Borneo, $C_{10}H_{16}$. An oily liquid extracted from the Dryobalanops camphora, and isomeric with oil of turpentine. It can also be obtained from oil of valerian by destructive distillation. Borneene is almost insoluble in water, and has the odor of turpentine.

Bör-nē-ō, s. & a. [From Brunai, the local name for the capital of the kingdom of Borneo proper.]

A. As substantive: An island, about 800 miles long by 700 broad, in the Eastern Archipelago, between 7° 4' and 4° 10' S. lat. and 108° 50' and 119° 20' E. long.

B. As adjective: Growing in Borneo; in any way connected with Borneo.

Borneo camphor, s. A gum, called also BORNEOL (q. v.).

bör-nē-öl, s. [From Borne(o), and (alcoh)ol.]

Chem.: Borneol, or Borneo camphor, $C_{10}H_{17}(OH)$, is found in the trunks of a tree growing in Borneo, the Dryobalanops camphora. It has been prepared by the action of sodium or of alcoholic potash on common camphor. Borneol is a monad alcohol, forming ethers. When heated with HCl in a sealed tube $C_{10}H_{17}Cl$ (camphyl chloride) is formed. By heating borneol with P_2O_5 it is converted into a hydrocarbon borneene ($C_{10}H_{16}$). Borneol forms small transparent crystals, smelling like camphor and pepper; melting at 198°, and boiling at 212°. Its alcoholic solution is dextrorotary. Heated with nitric acid it is converted into ordinary camphor.

bör-nē-šite, s. [From Borneo (q. v.).]

Chem.: $O.N.C_7H_{14}O_6$, a crystalline substance melting at 175°. It is found in Borneo caoutchouc.

bör-nīne, s. [In Ger., &c., bornine; from Von Born, an eminent mineralogist of the eighteenth century.]

Min.: A mineral, called also Tetradymite (q. v.).

born-ing rod, s. [BONING ROD.]

bör-nite, s. [In Ger. bornit. Named after Von Born.] [BORNINE.]

Min.: An isometric, brittle mineral, occurring massive, granular, or compact. The hardness is 3, the sp. gr. 4.4-5.5, the luster metallic, the color between red and brown, the streak pale grayish-black, slightly shining. Composition: Copper, 50-71; sulphur, 21.4-28.24; iron, 6.41-18.3. It is a valuable ore of copper found in this country and in almost every other quarter of the globe in which copper ore exists. It is colloquially called “horseflesh ore.”

born-shēt, *borne-shet, s. [From Ger. borg=preventer, and schatz= . . . tax; schatzung: Dut. schattung=taxation, tax (?).] A composition for protection from being plundered by an army.

“He joined with Holke, being both as Simeon and Levi—exact great contribution, and borneshets, or compositions, pressing an infinite deale of money out of the Duke of Saxon’s hereditary lands.”—Monro: Exped., pt. ii., p. 154.

bör-ō-cāl-çite, s. [Eng., &c., boro(n); calcite.] Min.: The same as Boronatocalcite and Ulexite (q. v.).

bör-ön, s. [From borax (q. v.).]

Chem.: A triatomic element, symbol B. Atomic weight 11. It occurs in nature combined in the form of boracic acid $B(OH)_3$ and its salts. Boron is obtained by fusing boric trioxide B_2O_3 with sodium. It is a tasteless, inodorous, brown powder, a non-conductor of electricity; it is slightly soluble in water, permanent in the air; burnt in chlorine gas it forms boron chloride BCl_3 , a volatile, fusing liquid, boiling at 18° 23, sp. gr. 1.35; it is decomposed by water into boric acid and hydrochloric acid. When amorphous boron is heated with aluminium the boron dissolves in it, and separates out as the metal cools. The aluminium is removed by caustic soda. It crystallizes in monoclinic octohedra, which scratch ruby and corundum, but are scratched by the diamond; the sp. gr. is 2.68. Heated in oxygen it ignites, and is covered with a coating of brown trioxide. Amorphous boron, fused with nitrate of potassium, explodes. Boron forms one oxide B_2O_3 , obtained by heating boric acid to redness; it forms a glassy, hygroscopic, transparent solid, volatile at white heat. It dissolves metallic oxides, yielding colored beads (see BORAX-BEADS). Boron unites with fluorine, forming a colorless gas BF_3 , having a great affinity for water. It carbonizes organic bodies; 700 volumes are soluble in one volume of water, forming an oily, fusing liquid. Amorphous boron combines directly with nitrogen, forming boron nitride BN , a light amorphous white solid which, heated in a current of steam, yields ammonia and boric acid.

bör-ō-nā-trō-cal-çite, s. [Eng., &c., boro(n); natro(n); calcite.]

Min.: The same as Ulexite (Dana) (q. v.).

bör-ō-nī-a, s. [Named after Francis Borone, an Italian servant of Dr. Sibthorp, the botanist and traveler in Greece.]

Bot.: A genus of plants belonging to the order Rutaceæ (Rueworts). The species are pretty little Australian plants, flowering all the year, and generally sweet-scented.

bör-ō-sil-ī-câte, s. [Eng., &c., boro(n); silicate.]

Borosilicate of lime: A compound consisting of a borate and silicate.

Min.: The same as Datolite (q. v.).

1. Of things:

(1) A pledge, a surety.

"And thar till into borwch draw I

Myn herytage all halily.

The king thoct he was traist Inewch

Sen he in borwch hys landis drewch."

The Bruce (ed. Skeat), bk. i., 625-28.

"This was the first source of shepherds sorowe,

That now nill be quitt with baile nor borrowe."

Spenser: Shep. Cal., v.

(2) The act of borrowing or taking as a loan.

"Yet of your royal presence I'll adventure

The borrow of a week."

Shakesp.: Wint. Tale, i. 2.

2. Of Beings or persons: A surety, a pledge, a bail; one who stands security.

"He that biddeth borroweth, & bringeth himself in

S. borgian=to borrow, to lend (Somner); Icel. & Sw. borga; Dan. borge; Dut. & Ger. borgen=to take or give upon trust. From A. S. borg=a loan, a pledge.] [BORROW, s.]

I. Of giving security:

1 To give security for property.

"Thare borwyd that Erle than his land,

That lay into the kyngis hand."

Wyntoun, vii. 9, 315.

2. To become surety for a person.

"Gif any man borrowes another man to answer to the soyte of any partle, either he borrowes him, as haill forthcummand borgh, . . . then anght he that him borrowed there to appeare, and be discharged as law will."—Baron Courts, c. 38.

II. Of asking in loan:

1. Lit.: To ask and obtain money or property upon loan, with the implied intention of returning it in due time.

(1) Of money:

"... the government was authorized to borrow two millions and a half."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xx.

(2) Of property:

"Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbors."—2 Kings iv. 3.

¶ [In Exod. xi. 2, "... let every man borrow of his neighbor, and every woman of her neighbor, jewels of silver, and jewels of gold," the translation is incorrect. The marginal rendering ask is accurate. The Hebrew verb is shaal, the ordinary one for ask, in the sense of request to be given, and is rendered ask in Psalm ii. 8, "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance," &c., and desired in 1 Sam. xii. 13, "Now, therefore, behold the King whom ye have chosen, and whom ye have desired."]

2. Fig.: Of taking without the obligation, or in some cases even the possibility, of returning what is appropriated. Used—

(a) In an indifferent sense.

"These verbal signs they sometimes borrow from others, and sometimes make themselves."—Locke.

"While hence they borrow vigor: . . ."

Thomson: The Seasons; Autumn.

(b) In a bad one.

"Forgot the blush that virgin fears impart

To modest cheeks, and borrow'd one from art."

Cowper: Expostulation.

Hence (c) not to borrow is more honorable than to do so.

"It gives a light to every age,

It gives, but borrows none."

Cowper: O. H.; The Light and Glory of the Word.

"Itself a star, not borrowing light,

But in its own glad essence bright."

Moore: Fire-Worshippers.

bor'-row (2), s. [BOROUGH (1).]

borrow-mail, s. [BURROW-MAIL.]

bör'-röwed, pa. par. & a. [BORROW, v.]

As participial adjective:

1. Obtained on loan.

"... on a borrowed horse, which he never returned."

Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xviii.

2. Not genuine; hypocritical.

"Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,

To see those borrow'd tears that Sinon sheds!"

Shakesp.: Tarquin and Lucrece, 1548-49.

borrowed days, s. [BORROWING DAYS.]

"March said to Aperill,

I see three hogs upon a hill;

But lend your three first days to me,

And I'll be bound to gar them die.

The first, it sall be wind and weat;

The next, it sall be snaw and sleet;

The third, it sall be sic a freeze,

Sall gar the birds stick to the trees.

But when the borrowed days were gane,

The three silly hogs came hirplin hame."

†Bots on it: An execration. (Shakesp.: Per., ii. 1.)

B. As adjective: Producing the larvæ called bots. bot-fly, s.

Entomology:

1. Singular: One of the names given to any species of the genus Æstrus, or even of the family Æstridæ. These insects are sometimes called also Breeze-flies, Brize-flies, and Gad-flies, the last of these names not being a properly distinctive one, for it is applied also to the Tabanidæ, a totally distinct family of dipterous insects. The bot-fly, which has attracted most notice, is Gasterophilus equi, often called the gad-fly of the horse. It is a downy two-winged fly, which in August deposits from 50 to 100 eggs on the legs, the back of the neck, and other parts of a horse accessible to the animal's tongue. Slightly irritated by them the horse licks the part affected, with the effect of bursting the egg and transferring the minute larvæ to its mouth, whence they make way to the stomach and grow to be an inch long. They are ejected with the food, spend their chrysalis state in the earth or dung, and emerge perfect insects but with no proboscis capable of being used for feeding purposes. It is not food they require, it is to propagate their species and die. A similar insect is Æstrus hemorrhoidalis. Sheep, oxen, &c., have parasites of an analogous kind. [BREEZE-FLY, BRIZE, GAD-FLY, ÆSTRIDÆ, ÆSTRUS.]

2. Plural: The English name for the family of Æstridæ.

bōt (4). A colloquial expression for the English Board of Trade unit of Electrical Supply. It is formed of the initials of the words "Board of Trade."

*B. As substantive: The same as BOTANIST (q. v.).

"That there is such an herb . . . is by all botanics or herbalists, I have seen, acknowledged."—M. Casaubon: Of Credulity, &c., p. 80.

botanic-drawing, s. The art of representing plants for scientific study. To enable the figures to be used for the purpose now mentioned, every effort must be put forth to insure accuracy in the delineations, &c. Microscopic representations of the fully-expanded flower and of the fruit when ripe, or, if possible, of the organs of fructification at successive stages of development, should be super-added to render the drawing complete. (Lindley.) botanic-garden, s. A garden laid out for the scientific study of botany. Sometimes the several plants are arranged, to a certain extent, according to their places in the natural system, and, in any case, opportunity is obtained for seeing the plants pass through their several stages, and obtaining their flowers, fruit, &c., to anatomize and to figure.

botanic physician, s. A physician whose remedies consist chiefly of herbs and roots. Akin to an herbalist; but many herbalists have had no medical education, while any proper "physician" has enjoyed that advantage.

bōt-ān'-i-cal, a. [Eng. botanic; -al.] The same as BOTANIC (q. v.).

" . . . the earliest botanical researches of Sloane."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

"The lilies of the field have a value for us beyond their botanical ones."—Tyndall: Frag. of Science, 3d ed., v. 104.

botanical-geography, s. A comparison of the plants of different regions of the globe, showing the range and distribution of each. [PHYTOGEOGRAPHY.]

bōt-ān'-i-cal-lỹ, adv. [Eng. botanical; -ly.] After the manner adopted in botany; as botanists are accustomed to do. (Ash.)

"Your man of science, who is botanically or otherwise inquisitive."—London Daily News, August 18, 1869.

†bōt-ān'-ics, s. [In Sw., Dan., & Ger. botanik; Fr. botanique=botany; Sp., Port., & Ital. botanica=botany; Lat. botanicum=a herbarium (?).] The same as BOTANY (q. v.).

bōt'-an-ist, s. [Fr. botaniste.] One who collects and scientifically studies plants.

† For the names of various botanists see the article Botany (Hist.).

"Thus botanists, with eyes acute
To see prolific dust minute,
Taught by their learn'd northern Brahmen
To class by pistil and by stamen,
Produce from nature's rich dominion
Flowers polyandrian, monogynian,
Where embryo blossoms, fruits, and leaves Twenty prepare, and one receives."
Jones: The Enchanted Fruit.

bōt'-an-ize, v. i. [In Ger. botanisieren; Fr. botaniser; Gr. botanizō=to root up weeds; from botanē=an herb.] [BOTANY.] To collect plants with the object of examining them scientifically.

bōt'-an-i'-z-ing, pr. par., a. & s. [BOTANIZE.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As subst.: The act or operation of collecting, and afterward scientifically examining, plants.

*bōt'-a-nō, s. [Fr. boutant=a kind of stuff made at Montpellier. (Jamieson.)] A piece of linen dyed blue. (Scotch.)

"Botanos or peeces of linnin litted blew, the peece—iii. l."—Rates, A. 1611.

"Botanoes or blew lining."—Rates, A. 1670.

*bōt'-an-ōl'-ō-gēr, s. [From Gr. botanologeō=to gather herbs. Now superseded by botanist (q. v.).]

" . . . that eminent Botanologer, . . ."—Brown: Garden of Cyrus.

*bōt'-an-ōl'-ō-gỹ, s. [Gr. botanologeō=to gather herbs.] A discourse regarding plants. (Bailey.) Now superseded by the term botany (q. v.).

bōt'-an-ō-mān-çỹ, s. [In Gr. botanomanteia; botanē=grass, fodder, and manteia=divination.] Divination by means of herbs, especially by means of sage (Salvia) or by fig-leaves. The inquirer wrote his name and the question he wished answered on the leaves. Afterward he exposed these to the wind, which blew some of them away. Those which remained were then collected, and the letters written on each were placed together, so as, if possible, to bring coherent sense out of them, and any sentence constructed out of them was supposed to be the reply sought for.

" . . . the numberless forms of imposture or ignorance called kapnomancy, pyromancy, arithmancy, libanomancy, botanomancy, keptolomancy," &c.—Smith: Dict. of the Bible, i. 442.

bōt'-an-ỹ, s. & a. [Gr. botanē=grass-fodder: boskō=to feed, to tend cattle or sheep.]

A. As substan.: The science which treats of plants. It embraces a knowledge of their names, their external and internal organizations, their anatomy and physiology, their qualities, their uses, and their distribution over the world, with the laws by which this distribution is regulated, or the geological occurrences by which it has been brought about.

History: From the remotest antiquity plants must have been at least looked at, and to a certain extent studied; and it is reported in Scripture regarding Solomon, that "he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall" (1 Kings iv. 33). If his sayings on that subject were put in writing they have perished. The first important scientific notices regarding plants which have reached our time are in Aristotle's Inquiries Concerning Animals, about B. C. 347. Theophrastus, who succeeded him in B. C. 324, gave great attention to plants, knowing, however, it is said, only about 355. Pliny, among the Romans, was also interested in botanical study, as in natural history generally. The Arabs gave some attention to botany; but up to the year A. D. 1231, according to Sprengel, only about 1,400 plants were known. After the revival of letters, Conrad Gesner, who died in 1565, collected materials and made drawings for a history of plants. Matthew Lobel, a Dutchman at the court of Queen Elizabeth, attempted a natural classification of plants, and some of his orders are still retained. Cæsalpinus, a Roman physician, attached to the court of Pope Sextus VI., made various botanical discoveries. About A. D. 1650, the microscope began to be used for the examination of plants. Grew and Malpighi flourished in the same century; and in 1686 Ray published the first volume of his Systema Plantarum. About 1735, Linnæus gave to the world his celebrated Systema Naturæ, the botanical portion of which contains his artificial system, which is, even now, obsolescent rather than obsolete. As a rule, his classes were founded on the number, position, &c., of the stamens, and his orders on the number and character of the pistils. He founded twenty-four classes, viz., (1) Monandria, (2) Diandria, (3) Triandria, (4) Tetrandria, (5) Pentandria, (6) Hexandria, (7) Heptandria, (8) Octandria, (9) Enneandria, (10) Decandria, (11) Dodecandria, (12) Icosandria, (13) Polyandria, (14) Didynamia, (15) Tetradynamia, (16) Monadelphia, (17) Diadelphia, (18) Polyadelphia, (19) Syngenesia, (20) Gynandria, (21) Monœcia, (22) Dioœcia, (23) Polygamia, and (24) Cryptogamia. (See these words for further details, and for the orders into which the several classes are divided.) Besides his artificial system of classification Linnæus attempted a natural one. In 1789, Antoine Laurent de Jussieu published his Genera Plantarum, in which, following in the direction in which Lobel, Ray, and Linnæus himself had led, he elaborated a natural system, the essential features of which are still retained. In Lindley's Vegetable Kingdom, published in 1867, the classification is as follows: Class I. Thallogens, II. Acrogens, III. Rhizogens, IV. Endogens, V. Dictyogens, VI. Gymnogens, and VII. Exogens.

Modern botany, or phytology, as it is sometimes called, comprises a number of subordinate sciences.

bōl, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, aş; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f. -cian, -tian = şan. -tion, -sion = şhñ; -tion, -şion = zhñ. -tious, -cious, -sious = şhş. -ble, -dle, &c. = bēl, dēl.

Lindley, in the main following Decandolle, divided it into Organography, or an explanation of the exact structure of plants; Vegetable Physiology, or the history of vital phenomena which have been observed in them; Glossology, formerly called Terminology, or a definition of the adjective terms used in botany and phytography, or an exposition of the rules to be observed in describing and naming plants. (Introd. to Bot., 3d ed., 1839, Pref.) All these are introductory to Systematic Botany, which is the classification and description of the several classes, orders, families, genera, species, varieties, &c., of plants in regular arrangement.

Thomé, author of the recognized text-book of botany in use in the technical schools of Germany, divides the science into—I. Morphology, or the Comparative Anatomy of Plants; II. Physiology, which is concerned with their vital phenomena; III. Botanical Geography; IV. Palaeophytology; V. Vegetal Palaeontology; VI. Classification of Plants; and VII. Practical or Applied Botany.

Robt. Brown, jr., in his Manual of Botany, published in 1874, divides it into—I. General Anatomy or Histology of Plants: 1. Organography, 2. Morphology, 3. Organogenesis, 4. Phytotomy; II. Physiological Botany; III. Vegetable Chemistry; IV. Nosology, or Vegetable Pathology; V. Teratology, a study of abnormalities; VI. Taxology, Taxonomy, Classification, or Systematic Botany: 1. Terminology, 2. Glossology; VII. Phyto-geography; VIII. Palaeo-phytology, Geological Botany, Vegetable Palaeontology, or Fossil Botany; IX. Medical Botany; X. Agricultural Botany; XI. Horticultural Botany; and XII. Industrial Botany. (See these terms. See also PLANT, VEGETABLE KINGDOM, &c., &c.)

B. As adjective: In which good botany exists, in which interesting plants abound. [BOTANY-BAY.]

Botany Bay, s. & a. [So called from the number of new plants discovered there when Captain Cook's party landed in 1770.]

A. As substantive: An inlet of the sea five miles long and broad, about seven miles north of Sidney Heads in New South Wales.

B. As adjective: Growing at or in any other way connected with Botany Bay. (See the compounds which follow.)

Botany-Bay Oak: Casuarina. A genus of trees, nat. order Casuarinaceae. The red wood of the trees is used for cabinet work. Also called Beef-wood.

Botany-Bay Kino: A gum which exudes from the bark of an Australian tree, Eucalyptus resinifera, and other species of the genus. It is an astringent. It has properties like those of Catechu or Kino, and is used in pharmacy, etc., for the same purposes as are the two drugs mentioned.

Botany-Bay Tea: The English name of the Smilax glycyphylla, an evergreen climbing-plant, with three-nerved leaves, and petioles with tendrils.

bō-tār'-gō, s. [Sp. botarga=a kind of pantaloons, the dress of harlequin; harlequin himself; a sort of sausage. Contracted from botargua=a large leather bag.] A relishing sort of food, being a sausage made of the roes of the mullet fish, and eaten with oil and vinegar. It is much used on the coasts of the Mediterranean as caviar is in Russia as a "relish" for food and an incentive to drink.

¶ The French editor of Rabelais says—

"In Provence, they call botargues the hard roe of the mullet, pickled with oil and vinegar. The mullet (muge) is a fish which is caught about the middle of December; the hard roes of it are salted against Lent, and this is what is called botargues, a sort of boudins (puddings), which have nothing to recommend them but their exciting of thirst."

"Because he was naturally phlegmatic, he began his meal with some dozens of gammons, dried neats' tongues, botargos, sausages, and such other forerunners of wine."—Ozell; Rabelais, b. i., ch. 21.

"Botargo, anchovies, puffs too, to taste
The Maronean wines, at meals thou hast," Heath: Clarastella, in Heywood's Quintess. of Poetry, vol. ii., p. 16. (Nares.)

bō-tā'u-rūs, s. [A contraction of Bos taurus, the scientific name of the bull, which the several species of botaurus remotely resemble in voice.]

Ornith.: A genus of birds belonging to the family Ardeidae or Herons, and the sub-family Ardeinae or True Herons. It contains the Bitterns. [BITTERN.]

bōt'-card, s. [From the French bastarde=a demi-cannon or demi-culverin; a smaller piece of any kind (Cotgrave).] A kind of artillery used in the time of James V.

"Two great cannon, thrown-mouthed Mow and her Marrow, with two great Botcards."—Pittscottie, p. 143. (Jamieson.)

bōtch (1), *boccl-in, *bocch-yn, *bocch-en, v. t. [In Dut. botsen=to knock, dash, strike against, clash with; from O. L. Ger. botzen=(1) to strike or beat, (2) to repair.]

1. Lit.: To patch in any way. (Wycliffe: 2 Chron. xxxiv.)

2. Fig.: To put together clumsily.

"Go with me to my house,
And hear thou there how many fruitless pranks
This ruffian hath botch'd up, that thou thereby Mayst smile at this."

Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, iv. 1.

"And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts."

Shakesp.: Hamlet, iv. 5.

bōtch (2), v. t. [From botch (2), s. (q. v.)] To mark with botches.

"Young Hylas, botch'd with stains too foul to name.

In cradle here renews his youthful frame."

Garth.

bōtch (1), *botche (1), s. [From botch, v. (q. v.)]

1. A patch.

2. A part of any work ill-finished, so as to appear worse than the rest.

"With him,
To leave no rubs or botches in the work,
Fleance, his son, must embrace the fate."

Shakesp.: Macbeth, iii. 1.

3. A part clumsily added.

"If both those words are not notorious botches . . ."

—Dryden.

"A comma ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet, making here a perfect botch, Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch."

Swift.

bōtch (2), *botche (2), *bohche, *bocche, *boche, *boshe, s. [Fr. bosse; O. Fr. boce=(1) the boss of a buckler; (2) a botch, a boil.] A swelling of an ulcerous character, or anything similar on the skin; a wen, a boil.

"Boche, sore (botche, P.). Ulcus, Cath."—Prompt. Parv.

"Botches and blains must all his flesh imboss,
And all his people." Milton: P. L., bk. xii.

bōtched (1), *bōtcht, pa. par. [BOTCH (1), v.]

"I see, I see, 'tis counsel given in vain,
For treason botcht in rhyme will be thy bane."

Dryden: Absalom & Achitophel, pt. ii.

bōtched (2), pa. par. [BOTCH (2), v.]

bōtche'-mēnt, *bōch'-mēnt, s. [Eng. botche=botch (1)=a patch; and Eng., &c., suff. -ment.]

"Bochment (botchement, P.) Additamentum amplificamentum, . . ."—Prompt. Parv.

bōtch'-ēr (1), *bōtch'-ar, *bōtch'-are, *bōch-chare, s. & a. [Eng. botch (1), v.; -er.]

A. As substantive: A mender of old things, especially clothes; an inferior kind of tailor.

"Botchare of olde thinges, P. Resartor."—Prompt. Parv.

"Botchers left old cloaths in the lurch,
And fell to turn and patch the church."

Hudibras.

" . . . a botcher's cushion, . . ."—Shakesp.: Coriol., ii. 1.

B. As adjective: Bungling, unskillful.

"Bochchare, or vnecrafty (botchar, P.). Iners, C. F."—Prompt. Parv.

bōtch'-ēr (2), s. [Eng. botch (2), s., from the spotted appearance of the skin.] A young salmon; a grilse.

"Formerly grilse, or botchers, were far more plentiful than they have been since the passing of the Fishery Laws."—London Times, August 26, 1875.

bōtch'-ēr-ly, a. [Eng. botcher; -ly.] Like the work of a botcher; patched in a clumsy way; blundered.

"Publishing some botcherly mingle-mangle of collections out of other."—Hartlib.: Transl. of Comen., 1642, p. 30.

bōtch'-ēr-ly, s. [Eng. botcher; -ly.] The results of botching, clumsy workmanship.

"If we speak of base botchery, were it a comely thing to see a great lord, or a king, wear sleeves of two parishes, one half of worsted, the other of velvet?"—World of Wonders, 1608, p. 235.

bōtch'-īng (1), pr. par., a. & s. [BOTCH (1), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb.)

C. As substantive: The act of mending old clothes; the act of bungling.

"Nor is it botching, for I cannot mend it."

Browne: Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s.

bōtch'-īng (2), pr. par. [BOTCH (2), v.]

bōtch'-y, a. [Eng. botch (2); -y.] Marked with botches.

"And those boils did run? say so: did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core."—Shakesp.: Troil. and Cress., ii. 1.

bōt (1), *bōt (Eng.), bote, *bute (Scotch), s. [Boor (1), s.]

1. Ordinary Language:

1. (See boot.)

2. A remedy.

"And be borrough for his bale, and biggen hym bote
And so amende that is mysdo and euermore the better." Piers Plow.: Vis., iv. 89, 90.

3. Restoration, amendment.

"And do bote to brugges . . . that to-broke were."
Piers Plow.: Vis., vii. 24

4. Safety.

"Bote of (or, P.) helthe. Salus."—Prompt. Parv.

5. A savior, the Savior.

"Bot ther on com a bote as-tyt."

Ear. Eng. Allit. Poems (ed. Morris), Pearl, 645.

II. Law: An Anglo-Saxon term, still in use, meaning necessities required for the carrying on of husbandry. The corresponding word of French origin is estovers or estouviers, from estoffer=to furnish. Such necessities in certain cases may be taken from the estate of another. There are many kinds of bote. Thus house-bote is a sufficient allowance of wood to repair or to burn in the house. If to burn, it is a fire-bote. So plow-bote and cart-bote are wood to be employed in making and repairing all instruments of husbandry; and hay-bote or edge-bote is wood for repairing hay-edges or fences. [See also KIN-BOTE, MAN-BOTE, THEIF-BOTE.]

bote (2), s. [Boor (2).]

"Bote for a mannys legge (bote or cokvr, H. coker, P.) Bota, ocrea."—Prompt. Parv.

bote (3), s. [A. S. bodian=to command, to announce; bod=command.] A message.

"Charlis sent to thee 'this sond; thou ne ge(ste)st nor othre bote."—Sir Ferumb. (ed. Herrtage), 401.

bote (4), s. [Boat.] (Spenser: F. Q., III., viii. 21.)

bōte, *bō'-tēn, v. t. [From bote (1), s. (q. v.)] In Sw. bota.] To boot, to amend.

bōte, pret. of v. [A. S. bāt, pret. of bītan=to bite.] Bit.

" . . . that he bote his lippes."

Piers Plow.: Vis., v. 84.

bōte, conj. [BUT.]

bote-yif, conj. But if, except that.

bō'-tēl (1), *bot-ēlle (1), s. [BOTTLE.] (Prompt. Parv.)

bot-el (2), *bot-elle (2), s. [O. Fr. botel.] A bundle, a feed of hay. [BOTTEL (1).]

"Botelle of hey. Fenifascis."—Prompt. Parv.

bot-ew, s. [From O. Fr. boteau.] A kind of large boat.

"Botew. Coturnus, botula, crepita."—Prompt. Parv.

bōth, *bōthe, *bōathe, *bāthe, *bēthe, *bōthēn, *bō-thene, *bō-thyn (Eng.), bāith, *bāthe, *bāyth, *bāid (Scotch), pro., a. & conj [In Icel. bathir, bæthi; Sw. båda; Dan. baade. Mæso-Goth. bajoths; Dut. & (N. H.) Ger. beide; O. H. Ger. pēde.] Two taken together.

¶ It is opposed to the distributives either=one of two, and neither=none of two. (Prof. Bain.)

A. As pronoun:

"During his ride home, he only said, wife and bairr baith; mother and son baith—Sair, sair to abide!"—Scott Guy Mannering, ch. ix.

B. As adjective:

"Both the proofs are extant."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives v. 5.

C. As conjunction (followed by and): It is a conjunction with a certain disjunctive force, i. e., separating the two conjoined members and bringing each into prominence.

" . . . so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks."—Acts xix. 19.

"That bothe his soule and eek hemself offend."

Chaucer: C. T. 3,067.

"That are both his and mine."

Shakesp.: Macb., iii. 1.

bōthe, s. [BOOTH.]

bōt'-ēm, s. [BOTTOM.]

bōth'-ēm-lēs, a. [BOTTOMLESS.]

*bōth'-ēn, s. [Cf. A. S. bothen=rosemary; darnel (Somner).]

Bot.: A composite plant, Chrysanthemum segetum.

¶ White bothen, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.

bōth'-ēr (Eng.), bōth'-ēr, *bāth'-ēr (Sc.), v. t. & i. [Etymology doubtful. Wedgwood derives it from Dut. bulderen=to rage, to bluster. Mahn and Skeat, with more probability, suggest Ir. buidhirt=vexation, trouble; buidhrim=to vex, to disturb.]

A. Trans.: To tease, to vex, or annoy one by making continual noise, by dwelling on the same subject, by continued solicitation, or in any other way.

'With the din of which tube my head you so bother, That I scarce can distinguish my right ear from t'other.' Swift.

B. Intrans.: To make many words.

"The auld guidmen, about the grace, Frae side to side they bother."

Burns: The Holy Fair.

bōth'-ēr, s. [From bother, v. (q. v.)] The act of rallying, or teasing, by dwelling on the same subject. (Colloquial.)

bō-thēr-ā'-tion, s. [From Eng. bother, and suff. -ation.] The act of making bother.

bōth'-ēred, pa. par. & a. [BOTHER, v.]

bōth'-ēr-īng, pr. par. [BOTHER, v.]

*both'-ie, s. (Scotch.) A booth, a cottage, a hovel (usually in the agricultural districts), in which rights of occupation seem to be about equally exercised by man and beast, and no attempt is made at privacy for the opposite sexes.

bothie-system, s. A term used in the British newspapers in discussing the degraded condition of the agricultural population in some districts, the phrase arising from the conjunction of affairs described in the preceding article.

*bothil, s. [BOTHUL.]

*bōthne, *bōth'-ēne, s. [Low Lat. bothena=a barony, or territory; Arm. bot=a tract of land.]

1. A park in which cattle are fed and inclosed. (Skene.)

2. A barony, lordship, or sheriffdom.

"It is statute and ordained, that the King's Mute, that is, the King's court of ilk Bothene, that is of ilk schirefedome, salbe halden within fourtie daies."—Skene: Assis. Reg. Dav.

*bōth'-ōm, *bōth'-ūm, *bōth'-ē-ūm, s. [From Fr. bouton=button, bud, germ.] [BUTTON.] A bud, particularly of a rose.

"Of the bothom the swete odor."

The Romaunt of the Rose.

"That nyght and day from hir she stalle Bothoms and roses over alle." Ibid.

*bōth'-ōn, v. t. [BUTTON, v.]

"Bothon clothys (botonyn, K. boton, P.). Botono, fibulo."—Prompt. Parv.

bōth'-rēn-chy'-ma, s. [From Gr. bothros=a pit, and enghyma=an infusion; engheō=to pour in; en and cheō=to pour.]

Bot.: Pitted tissue, called also porous tissue or basiform tissue, or dotted ducts, and by Morren Taphrenchyma. It consists of tubes which, when viewed under high microscopic power, seem full of holes, which, however, are only little pits in the thickness of the lining. It is of two kinds, articulated and continuous bothrenchyma. The former is well seen when its tubes are cut across in a cane or other woody-looking endogen; the latter consists of long, slender, interrupted pitted tubes, found often in connection with spiral vessels in the roots of plants. What Lindley called granular woody tissue he ultimately reduced under the second of these types of bothrenchyma.

bōth'-rī-ō-çeph'-al-ūs, s. [From Gr. bothrion=a small kind of ulcer, dimin. of bothros=a hole, a pit, and kephalē=the head.]

Zoöl.: An intestinal worm belonging to the class Scolecida, and the order Tæniada or Cestoidea. Bothriocephalus latus is the Russian tapeworm.

bōth'-rō-dēn'-drōn, s. [From Gr. bothros=a pit, and dendron=a tree.]

Palæont.: A tree with dotted stems found in the coal measures.

*bōth'-ūl, *bōth'-ie, *bōth'-ēl, būd'-dle, s. [Dut. buidel=a purse, because it bears gools or goldins=gold coins; guldin, a punning allusion to its yellow flowers. Cf. Wel. bothell=rotundity; a bottle, a blister.]

Bot.: An old English name for the plant genus Chrysanthemum.

¶ Chrysanthemum segetum is still called buddle in East Anglia.

"Bothel, buddle, chrysanthemum Bothul, bothel, vacinia."—Prompt. Parv.

*both-um, s. [BOTTOM.]

*bō'-tīe, s. [BOOTY.]

bôu'-gie, s. [From Fr. bougie=a wax candle, a bougie; Prov. bogia; Sp., Port., & Ital. bugia=a wax candle; so called from Bougie, a town of Algeria, where such candles were first made.]

Surgery: A smooth, flexible, elastic, slender cylinder, designed to be introduced into the urethra, rectum, or esophagus, in order to open or dilate it in cases of stricture or other diseases. It is formed either solid or hollow, and is sometimes medicated. It was originally made of slips of waved linen, coiled into a cylindrical or slightly conical form by rolling them on a hard, smooth surface. Bougies for surgical purposes are said to have been invented by Aldereto, a Portuguese physician. They were first described in 1554 by Amatus, one of his pupils. The slenderer forms of bougies are adapted for the urethra, the larger for the rectum, vagina, and esophagus.

¶ An armed bougie is one with a piece of caustic fixed at its extremity. When an instrument such as is described supra is made of metal and is inflexible it is called a CATHETER or SOUND (q. v.)—the former if hollow and the latter if solid.

nected with Sw. bullra=to make a loud noise, to thunder; Dan. buldre=to racket, rattle, make a noise, to chide, to bully; Dut. bulderen=to bluster, rage, or roar. From Sw. buller=noise; Dan. bulder=noise, tumbling noise, bustle, brawl. So called from the noise which boulders make when rolled over a rocky or pebbly beach by a stormy sea or a river in flood.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ord. Lang.: A large, roundish, smooth stone, bearing marks of abrasion and transport.

II. Geol.: A large, rounded block of stone, which, whether lying loose on the surface of the ground or imbedded in the soil, is of different composition from the rocks adjacent to which it now rests, and must, therefore, have been transported from a lesser or greater distance. From the last-mentioned facts, boulders are often called erratic-blocks or, simply, erratics. [BOULDER-FORMATION, BOULDER-PERIOD.]

B. As adjective: Marked by the presence of boulders; acting as boulders do.

boulder-clay, s. A clay stratified or unstratified, belonging to the boulder formation (q. v.).

boulder-formation, boulder formation, s.

Geol.: A formation consisting of mud, sand, and clay, more frequently unstratified than the reverse, generally studded with fragments of rocks, some of them angular, others rounded, with boulders scattered here and there through the mass. As much of the material has been transported from a greater or less distance, it is sometimes called drift. The old name diluvium, being founded on now-abandoned hypotheses, has become obsolete. [DILUVIUM.] The formation exists only from the poles to about 40° of latitude, unless where the Alps or other high mountains in warmer climes have originated boulder formation of their own. The nearer the poles one travels the larger are the erratic boulders. The rocks on which they rest are furrowed and scored with lines, as if ice with stones projecting from its surface had heavily driven over them. [GLACIATION.] Fossils, where they exist, indicate a very cold climate. [BOULDER-PERIOD.]

boulder-head, s.

Hydraulic Engineering: A work of wooden stakes to resist the encroachment of the sea.

boulder-paving, s. Paving with round, water-worn boulders, set on a graded bottom of gravel.

boulder-period, boulder period, s.

Geol.: The period specially characterized by the scattering over all the colder parts of the world of erratic blocks or boulders, many of them transported by ice. It comprehended specially the Pleistocene period, but extended into the Post-pleistocene. It is now generally called the Glacial Period (q. v.).

" . . . in the southern hemisphere the Macrauchenia, also, lived long subsequently to the ice-transporting boulder-period."—Darwin: Voyage round the World (ed. 1870), ch. viii., p. 174.

boulder-wall, s.

Masonry: A wall made of boulders or flints set in mortar.

bôul'-dêr-îng, a. [Scotch and Eng. boulder; -îng.] A term used only in the subjoined compound.

(2) A sudden crack, the noise of an explosion.

"Two hazel nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name;
This with the loudest bounce me sore amaz'd
That in a flame of brightest color blaz'd." Gay.

(3) A sudden spring. (Generally followed by out.)

2. Figuratively:

(1) A threat. (Eng. Colloquial.)

(2) A lie suddenly, boldly flung forth. (Eng. Colloquial.)

II. Technically: The large spotted Dog-fish, Scyllium Catulus.

bōunç'-ēr, s. [Eng. bounc(e); -er.] A boaster; one who, speaking of his exploits, so exaggerates as to be chargeable with lying. (Johnson.)

¶ In this country an unprovoked lie is, by children, characterized as a bouncer, which word among them carries the idea of the most extreme moral turpitude.

bōunç'-ing, pr. par. & a. [BOUNCE, v.]

A. As present participle: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"Their wealth the wild deer bounding thro' the glade."
Thomson: Castle of Indolence, ii. 17.

B. As adjective: Healthy, strong, robust; if of the feminine sex, then over-masculine in aspect or manner.

"Forsooth, the bounding Amazon."

Shakesp.: Mid. Night's Dream, ii. 1.

Bouncing Bet: A plant, the common Soapwort (Saponaria officinalis).

*bōu n'-çing-lŷ, adv. [Eng. bouncing; -ly.] With vain boasting, so as to make an unfounded assertion.

"Pighius said, bouncingly, the judgment of the apostolical see, with a council of domestic priests, is far more certain than the judgment of an universal council of the whole earth sans pope."—Barrow: On the Pope's Supremacy.

bōund (1), *bōunde, s. [In Mod. Fr. borne=a limit. From Norm. Fr. bunde, boune, bonne=a bound, a limit; O. Fr. bonde, bonne, bodne; Low Lat. bodina, bodena, bonna; Arm. boun=a boundary, a limit; boden, bod=a tuft, a cluster of trees which may be used to mark a boundary. Cf. also Wel. bonn=stem, base, stock; Gael. bonn=a sole, a foundation, bottom, base.] A boundary, a limit, a confine, Used—

1. Lit.: Of material limits:

(a) Set up or conventionally arranged by man.

"The princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound."—Hos. v. 10.

"Assyria, and her empire's ancient bounds."
Milton: P. R., bk. iii.

(b) Prescribed by God in nature.

"He hath compassed the waters with bounds, until the day and night come to an end."—Job xxvi. 10.

"On earth's remotest bounds how welcome here!"

Campbell: Gertrude of Wyoming, pt. i. 21.

2. Fig.: Of limits not formed by any material thing:

"And hast thou cross'd that unknown river

Life's dreary bound?"

Burns: Elegy on Captain M. H. Anderson.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between bounds and boundary: "Bounds is employed to designate the whole space including the outer line that confines; boundary comprehends only this outer line. Bounds are made for a local purpose; boundary for a political purpose. The master of a school prescribes the bounds beyond which the scholar is not to go; the parishes throughout England have their boundaries which are distinguished by marks; fields have likewise their boundaries, which are commonly marked out by a hedge or a ditch. Bounds are temporary and changeable; boundaries permanent and fixed: whoever has the authority of prescribing bounds for others, may in like manner contract or extend them at pleasure; the boundaries of places are seldom altered, except in consequence of great political changes. In the figurative sense bound or bounds is even more frequently used than boundary: we speak of setting bounds or keeping within bounds. But, to illustrate a boundary: It is necessary occasionally to set bounds to the inordinate appetites of the best disposed children, who cannot be expected to know the exact boundary for indulgence." (Crabb: Eng. Syn.)

bōund (2), s. [From BOUND (2), v. (q. v.)]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A leap, a spring, a jump.

"All, all our own shall the forests be,
As to the bound of the roebuck free,"

Hemans: Song of Emigration.

2. A rebound; the leap of something flying back by the force of the blow.

"These inward disgusts are but the first bound of this ball of contention."—Decay of Piety.

II. Technically:

1. Dancing: A spring from one foot to the other.

2. Mil.: The path of a shot comprised between two grazes. [RICOCHET-FIRING.]

bōund (1), *bōwnd, v. t. [From bound (1), s. (q. v.)]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. To limit, to terminate. Used of limits—

(1) Produced by material obstacles preventing extension.

"Of that magnificent temple which doth bound One side of our whole vale with grandeur rare."

Wordsworth: Farewell.

(2) Produced by obstacles to extension or advancement not of a material character.

"Thus heaven, though all-sufficient, shows a thrift
In his economy, and bounds his gift."

Dryden: Eleonora, 75-76.

"Vast was his empire, absolute his power,
Or bounded only by a law."

Cowper: Task, bk. vi.

2. To indicate the boundaries of.

II. Geom.: In the same sense as No. 1.

"That which bounds a solid is a superficies."—Euclid, bk. xi., def. 2.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between the verbs to bound, to limit, to confine, to circumscribe, to restrict: "The first four of these terms are employed in the proper sense of parting off certain spaces. Bound applies to the natural or political divisions of the earth: countries are bounded by mountains and seas; kingdoms are often bounded by each other." "Limit applies to any artificial boundary: as landmarks in fields serve to show the limits of one man's ground from another; so may walls, palings, hedges, or any other visible sign, be converted into a limit, to distinguish one spot from another, and in this manner a field is said to be limited, because it has limits assigned to it. To confine is to bring the limits close together, to part off one space absolutely from another; in this manner we confine a garden by means of walls. To circumscribe is literally to surround; in this manner a circle may circumscribe a square. There is this difference, however, between confine and circumscribe, that the former may not only show the limits, but may also prevent egress and ingress; whereas the latter, which is only a line, is but a simple mark that limits. From the proper acceptance of these terms we may easily perceive the ground on which their improper acceptance rests: to bound is an action suited to the nature of things or to some given rule; in this manner our views are bounded by the objects which intercept our sight: we bound our desires according to principles of propriety. To limit, confine, and circumscribe, all convey the idea of control which is more or less exercised . . . Inasmuch as all these terms convey the idea of being acted upon involuntarily, they become allied to the term restrict, which simply expresses the exercise of control on the will: we use restriction when we limit or confine, but we may restrict without limiting or confining: to limit and confine are the acts of things upon persons, or persons upon persons; but restrict is only the act of persons upon persons . . .

bōil, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, çorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, aš; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f. -cian, -tian = shan. -tion, -sion = shūn; -tion, -sion = zhūn. -tious, -cious, -sious = shūs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bel, del.

Bounded is opposed to unbounded, limited to extended, confined to expanded, circumscribed to ample, restricted to unshackled. (Crabb: English Synon.) bōund (2), v. i. & t. [From Fr. bondir=to leap; O. Fr. bondir, bundir=to resound; Prov. bondin=to resound; from Lat. bombito=to buzz, to hum; bombus=a humming, a buzzing.] [BOMBUS.]

A. Intransitive:

1. Of man or the inferior animals: To leap, jump, to spring, to move forward by a succession of leaps.

"Whom my fond heart had imagined to itself Bounding from cliff to cliff amidst the wilds."

Hemans: The Siege of Valencia.

"Now, while the birds thus sing a joyous song,
And while the young lambs bound
As to the tabor's sound,
To me alone there came a thought of grief."

Wordsworth: Intimations of Immortality.

2. Of things:

(1) To rebound.

"And the mighty rocks came bounding down Their startled foes among."

Hemans: Song of the Battle of Morgarten.

(2) To throb, run.

"My mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister Bounds in my father's."

Shakesp.: Troil. & Cress., iv. 5.

B. Transitive: To make to bound.

"If I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favors . . ."
—Shakesp.: Hen. V., v. 2.

"Whose veins bound richer blood than Lady Blanch?"
Ibid. King John, ii. 1.

bōund (1), bond (Eng.), bound, bund (Scotch), pret., pa. par. & a. [In A. S. & Dan. bunden; Dut. gebonden; Ger. verbunden; Goth. bundans.] [BIND.]

"Boundless rapacity and corruption were laid to his charge."
—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxiv.

"The news was received in London with boundless exultation."
—Ibid., ch. xviii.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between boundless, unbounded, unlimited, and infinite: "Boundless, or without bounds, is applied to infinite objects which admit of no bounds to be made or conceived by us. Unbounded, or not bounded, is applied to that which might be bounded. Unlimited, or not limited, applies to that which might be limited. Infinite, or not finite, applies to that which in its nature admits of no bounds. The ocean is a boundless object so long as no bounds to it have been discovered; desires are often unbounded which ought always to be bounded; and power is sometimes unlimited which is always better limited; nothing is infinite but that Being from whom all finite beings proceed." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) bōund-less-lý, adv. [Eng. boundless; -ly.] Limitlessly; so as not to be confined within any bounds.

" . . . can your constitution be so boundlessly amorous . . ."

bōu'nt'-y, bōu'nt'-ēe, bōu'nt'-ē, bōwnt'-ē, s. & a. [In Fr. bonté=goodness, kindness, benignity. From Norm. Fr. bountee, bountez=goodness (Kelham); O. Fr. bonteit; Prov. bontat; Sp. bondad; Port. bondade; Ital. bontà; Lat. bonitas=goodness; bonus=good.]

As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Goodness, excellence, kindness, beneficent feeling in the abstract or in general; the quality of being kind.

"In world nis nonso wyter mon
That al hire bounte telle con."

Spec. Lyr. Poetry (about 1300), Alysoun, 29, 30. (Spec. Ear. Eng., Morris & Skeat, pt. ii.)

2. Such beneficent feeling carried into action, specially in the direction of alms-giving; the act of giving money or other favors graciously or munificently; an act of kindness, generosity, liberality, munificence.

"For (as I seide) loo, that was she,
That dide to me so gret bounte."

The Romaunt of the Rose.

3. That which is given liberally or munificently. Alms, a donation of money, or anything similar, the result of generosity.

"To worth or want well-weigh'd be Bounty given."

Pope: Mor. Ess., iii. 229.

II. Technically: A grant or benefaction from the government to those whose services directly or indirectly benefit it, and to whom, therefore, it desires to accord some recompense, or at least recognition.

Law, Comm., & Polit. Econ.: A premium paid by government to the producers, exporters, or importers of certain articles, or to those who employ ships in certain trades. This is done either with the view of fostering a new trade during its infancy, or of protecting an old one which is supposed to be of special importance to the country.

In 1890 Congress passed an Act providing for a premium to be paid to the producers of cane, beet and sorghum sugar by way of bounty. This bounty was in the nature of a contract (made with each and every person in the United States engaged in the cultivation of such varieties of sugar) providing that, in the event their produce attained a given standard of saccharine strength, they should receive the bounty provided therefor by the appropriation from the Treasury. This Act greatly stimulated the sugar-producing industry of the country, and large amounts of money have been invested, and a larger amount of sugar has been produced in the United States during the years that have followed the passage of the Act than in any equal period in the history of the country.

bounty-jumper, s. A term used during the civil war in this country to denote one who enlisted in the U. S. military service to secure the bounty paid by the government for volunteers, and then deserted. Some of these enterprising individuals carried on a regular business of enlisting in one place under a certain name, hurrying to the front, receiving the bounty, deserting at once upon its receipt, and reappearing in some other place under a different name, only to re-enlist and repeat the process. The risks were great, but as the bounty was in some cases quite large, the practice found many votaries.

bōu'-quet (quet as kā), s. [Fr. bouquet=(1) a thicket, a clump or plantation of trees, (2) a posy of flowers. The same as bosquet; Prov. bosquet; Sp. bosquete; Ital. boschetto; Low Lat. boscum.] [Bosk.]

1. A nosegay, a bunch of flowers.

2. An agreeable perfume, emanating from flowers, wine, or essence.

bōu'-quĕt'-in, s. [Fr. bouquetin, probably at first boucestain, dimin. of bouc=a he-goat. (Littré.)] A ruminating mammal (Capra ibex). It was formerly plentiful in the Alps and other mountains of Europe, but has, by reason of relentless pursuit by hunters, become almost extinct. It is remarkable for its long backward-curved horns.

"From heights

bōw (2), v. t. [From Eng. bow (2), s., in the sense of an instrument for setting the strings of musical instruments in vibration.] To play with a bow.

"... also, that where no directions are given, the passage should be bowed, that is, the notes should be alternately played by an up and down bow."—Stainer & Barrett: Dict. Mus. Terms, p. 61.

bōw (1), s. & a. [From bow, v. (q. v.)]

A. As substantive:

1. Of things:

(1) A curve, bending, or zigzag in a street.

(2) Pl. (bows): Sugar tongs. (Scotch.) So called probably from their being bent.

2. Of persons: An act of reverence or acquiescence made by bending the body.

"Some clergy, too, she would allow,
 Nor quarrel'd at their awkward bow."—Swift.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to or consisting of a curve, bending or zigzag in a street; curved, crooked.

¶ In composition usually pronounced bōw.

bow-back, s. An arched or crooked back.

"On his bow-back he hath a battle set Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes."
Shakesp.: Venus and Adonis, 619-20.

bow-bent, a. Crooked.

"For once it was my dismal hap to hear
 A sibyl old, bow-bent with crooked age,
 That far events full wisely could presage."

(3) The arch of a bridge. (Scotch.)

"The falline downe of the three bowis of the brig of Tay bethe greit wattr and of Lowis Vairk on the 20 of Decem-bir in anno 1573."—MS. quoted, Muses Threnodie, p. 81.

3. Of anything looped, or doubled: The doubling of a string in a slip-knot. Johnson thinks that this may be a corruption of bight.

"Make a knot, and let the second knot be with a bow."—Wiseman.

4. Of a measure of distance: The length of an ordinary bow, which was used in ascertaining the distance from a mark in taking aim.

"No, no, Kate, you are two bowes down the winde."
R. Greene, in Harl. Mis., viii. 384. (Nares.)

II. Technically:

1. Archery: An instrument for projecting an arrow. It consists of a strip of wood or other material, the ends connected by a string. The bow is bent by retraction of the string, and the recoil

1. Cross-bow and Arrow. 2. Long-bow and Arrow.

imparted to the latter projects the arrow. In its simple state, and when large enough to be used for military purposes or for destroying large animals, it is known as the long-bow; when mounted transversely in a stock, it is a cross-bow. The former is exclusively adapted for shooting arrows; while bolts, or even round projectiles, may be thrown by the latter. (Knight.) [For the history of bows and arrows see ARCHERY. See also ARROW.]

2. Hat-making: A piece of elastic wood, six feet long, and having a catgut string stretched between its extremities. The vibrating string operates upon the felting-hair on a grid called a hurdle, lightens up the fibers, assembles them into a bat, and drives out the dust. [BOWING.]

3. Music: An appliance with which the strings of certain musical instruments of the viol class are set in vibration. It consists of a number of long horse-hairs stretched upon an elastic rod, which are tightened by a nut and screw. It was originally curved, whence its name. The old form is still seen in the rebeck or rebal of Algeria.

"Their instruments were various in their kind;
 Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind."
Dryden: The Flower and the Leaf, 357.

4. Drawing: An elastic slip for describing curves; an archograph.

5. Machinery: An elastic rod and string for giving reciprocating rotation to a drill. [BOW-DRILL.]

"Then to sea, boys, . . ."—Shakesp.: Tempest, ii. 2.

(2) In contempt for a young man, the term being intended to reflect upon his immaturity of character or of judgment.

"Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears!"
Cor. Boy! O slave!

Boy! false hound!

If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there

That, like an eagle in a dove-cot, I

Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli.

Alone I did it. Boy!" Shakesp.: Coriol., v. 6.

"Men of worth and parts will not easily admit the familiarity of boys, who yet need the care of a tutor."—Locke.

II. In special expressions or phrases, such as—

(1) Angry boy: The same as ROARING BOY (q. v.).

"Sir, not so young, but I have heard some speech Of the angry boys, and seen 'em take tobacco."

Ben Jonson: Alchem., iii. 4.

(2) Roaring boy: One of a set of lawless young men who, during the reign of James I., took a pleasure in committing street outrages, like the Mohawks of a somewhat later time. They were called also angry boys, terrible boys, angry roarers, &c.

"The king minding his sports, many riotous demeanors crept into the kingdom; divers sects of vicious persons, going under the title of roaring boys, bravadoes, roysters, &c., commit many insolencies."—Wilson: Life of Jas. I. (Nares.)

(3) Terrible boy: The same as ROARING BOY (q. v.).

"The doubtfulness of your phrase, believe it, sir, would breed you a quarrel once an hour with the terrible boys."—Ben Jonson: Epicene, i. 4.

28th of the same month. St. Nicholas was said to have been deeply pious, even from infancy. He was, therefore, held up as a model for imitation by boys. The boy-bishop elected on his day was chosen by the suffrages of children. Once appointed, he had to "hold up the state of a bishop answerably, with a crozier or pastoral-staff in his hand and a miter upon his head." He was attended by a dean and prebendaries, also children. Puttenham describes him as "a bishop who goeth about blessing and preaching with such childish terms as maketh the people laugh at his foolish counterfeit speeches." He was called also a barne-bishop. (Old Eng. barne is the same as the Scotch bairn, meaning a child.) [NICK.]

bōy'-cōtt, v. t. [Named from Captain Boycott, of Lough Mask House, in Mayo, Ireland, land agent in 1880 to Lord Erne, an Irish nobleman. The former gentleman having given offense about agrarian matters to the people among whom he lived, during the land-agitation of 1880-1, no one would gather in his crops. The case being reported in the Press, about sixty Orangemen, belonging to the north of Ireland, each man carrying a revolver, organized themselves into a "Boycott relief expedition," as if the captain had been a beleaguered British camp in Afghanistan or Zululand. The Government gave them a strong escort of cavalry, besides foot-soldiers and constabulary, artillery also being added on the return journey. The crops were gathered in and sent away, and the captain himself brought off to a region of greater security.] To put a person outside the pale of the society, high and low, amid which he lives, and on which he depends; socially to outlaw him, to refuse to sell to, and decline to buy from him; to refuse to work for or to employ him.

"They advise that men who pay full rents shall be boy-cotted; nobody is to work for them, nobody is to sell them anything, nobody is to buy anything of them."—Scotsman, Dec. 4, 1880.

Beaum. & Fl.: Māid's Tragedy.

brāb'-ble, s. [From brabble, v. (q. v.).] A quarrel, a clamorous dispute, a wrangle, a broil.

"Here in the streets, desperate of shame and state,

In private brabble did we apprehend him."

Shakesp.: Twelfth Night, v. 1.

brāb'-ble-mēnt, s. [Eng. brabble; -ment.] A noisy dispute, a quarrel, a broil. [BRABBLE, s.]

" . . . or make report of a quarrel and brabbement between him and another, . . ."—Holland: Plutarch, p. 44.

†brāb'-blēr, s. [Eng. brabbl(e); -er.] A quarrelsome, noisy fellow.

"We hold our time too precious to be spent

With such a brabblēr."

Shakesp.: King John, v. 2.

†brāb'-blīng, *brāb'-lŷng, pr. par., a. & s. [BRABBLE, v.]

A. & B. As present participle & particip. adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"If brabbling Makefray, at each fair and 'size, Picks quarrels for to shew his valiantize."

Bp. Hall: Satires, iv. 4.

C. As substantive: The act of engaging in noisy wrangling; a quarrel, a broil.

"I omit their brabblings and blasphemies."

Sir J. Harrington: Treatise on Play, about 1599.

†brāb'-blīng-lŷ, *brāb'-lŷng-lŷ, adv. [Eng. brabbling; -ly.] In a brabbling manner; quarrelsome, contentiously.

" . . . yet we will deale herein neither bitterly nor brabblingly, nor yet be carried away with anger and heate: though he ought to be reckened neither bitter, nor brabler y^t speaketh ye truth."—Jewell: Defense of the Apologie, p. 44.

brā-bē'-jūm, brā-bē'-i-ūm, s. [In Fr. brabej; Port. brabyla; Gr. brabeion = a prize in the Grecian games, which the elegant racemes of flowers are worthy to have been.]

Bot.: African Almond, a genus of plants belonging to the order Proteaceæ (Proteads). Brabejum stellatum, the common African Almond, is a tree, about fifteen feet high, from the Cape of Good Hope. The colonists call the seeds wild chestnuts. They roast and eat them.

bracc, *brac, s. [A. S. gebræc; O. Icel. brak; O. H. Ger. gebreh.] A breaking, crashing, a noise thence resulting, or simply a noise. (Ormulum, 1,178.)

brāc'-câte, a. [From Lat. braccatus, bracatus = wearing trousers.]

Ornith.: Furnished with feathers, which conceal the feet.

brāce, s. & a. [In Fr. brace, brasse = a fathom; bras = an arm; brace = an arm, as of the sea; a lance (Kelham); Prov. brassa, also brasse, brase, braise, brache = an armful, an embrace, a fathom; Sp. & Port. brazo = a fathom; Lat. brachia = the two arms extended; brachium = an arm.]

A. As substantive:

1. Ordinary Language:

1. An arm of the sea.

"The brace of Seynt George that is an arm of the see."—Maunderville, p. 126.

2. A measure of length, perhaps a fathom.

"A tombe of speckled stone a brace and a half high."—Hakluyt: Voyages, ii. 211.

3. That which supports anything, or holds it tightly together.

"Brace, or (of, P.) a balke. Uncus, loramentum, C. F."—Prompt. Parv.

(1) Any armlike support of a material structure. [CLASP.]

(2) A cord or ligament keeping anything in a state of tension, or preventing anything from slipping down.

(a) Gen.: In the foregoing sense.

"The little bones of the ear-drum do in straining and relaxing it, as the braces of the war-drum do in that."—Derham.

(b) Spec. (pl.): Two straps to keep trousers up; suspenders, "gallowes."

4. That which defends any person or thing, armor. Spec., for the arms.

"Keep it, my Pericles; it hath been a shield

'Twixt me and death (and pointed to this brace)."

Shakesp.: Pericles, ii. 1.

5. A pair, referring primarily to the two arms. [See etym.]

"Brace of howndys."—Prompt. Parv.

(1) The word is greatly used in this sense by sportsmen when speaking of the number of birds shot, in which case brace is used either as singular or plural.

"He is said, this summer, to have shot with his own hands, fifty brace of pheasants."—Addison.

(2) Sometimes employed of men, but then contemptuously.

6. The state of being held tightly together; tightness, tension.

"The most frequent cause of deafness is the laxness of the tympanum, when it has lost its brace or tension."—Holder.

chin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, as; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f. -tion, -sion = zhūn. -tious, -cious, -sious = shūs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bēl, dēl,

7. The state of being defended as if by armor; warlike preparation.

"So may he with more facile question bear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace."
Shakesp.: Othello, i. 3.

II. Technically:

1. Carpentry:

(1) A diagonal stay or scantling, connecting the horizontal and vertical members of a truss or frame, to maintain them at a prescribed angular relation.

(2) Pl. (braces): The timbers of a roof which serve to "strut" or prop the "backs" or principal rafters into which the upper ends are framed.

2. Cabinet-making: A stay for a trunk-lid or similar duty.

3. Shipwrighting: One of the eye-bolts on which the hooks of the rudder are secured; the gudgeons or googings.

4. Naut.: A rope passing from the end of the yard to another mast, and serving to trim the yards fore and aft.

5. Music:

(1) One of the cords of a drum by which the heads are stretched.

(2) A vertical line, usually a circumflex, coupling two or more staves together, and designed to indicate that the music thus connected is to be performed simultaneously by instruments, voices, or the two hands of one playing such an instrument as the pianoforte.

6. Boring-tools: A revolving tool-holder, one end of which is a swiveled head or shield, which rests in the hand or against the chest of the operator; at the other end is a socket to hold the tool. Called also a stock, more particularly in metal-working. The various kinds of brace in this sense are the angle-brace, which is a corner-drill, the crank-brace, the hand-brace, and the lever-brace. They may be held in the hand or made to act by machinery.

7. Vehicles:

(1) An iron strap passing from the head-block, behind and below the axle, and forward to another portion of the running-gear.

(2) A jointed bar by which the bows of a carriage-top are kept asunder, to distend the carriage-top cover.

(3) A thick strap by which a carriage-body is suspended from C-springs.

8. Printing:

(1) A printer's sign; a crooked line connecting several words or lines. In poetry a triplet is occasionally so marked. Johnson gives the following instance—

"Charge Venus to command her son,
Wherever else she lets him rove,
To shun my house, and field, and grove:
Peace cannot dwell with hate or love." } Prior.

(2) The stays of a printing-press, which serve to keep it steady in its position.

9. Mining: The mouth of a shaft.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to a brace in any of the foregoing senses.

brace-drill, s.

Metal.: A boring-tool snapped like a brace, the rotation being communicated by the revolution of the handle.

brace-pendant, s.

Naut.: A short pendant from the yard-arms, to hold the brace-block.

*brace-piece, s. The mantle-piece. (Scotch.)

"... the shelf below the brazen sconce above the brace-piece."—Ayrs. Legat., p. 283.

brāce, *brā'-cīn, *brā'-cŷn, v. t. [From brace, s. (q. v.); O. Fr. bracier.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: Of things material: To make taut or firm by braces.

"Bracyn, or sette streyte. Tendo."—Prompt. Parv.

(1) Of wooden beams or anything similar: To support, to prop.

(2) Of defensive armor for the body: To fasten tightly on; to make to embrace the body.

"Since he braced rebel's armor on."

Scott: Lord of the Isles, iii. 5.

"But for helmets braced and serried spears!"

Hemans: Siege of Valencia.

(3) Of offensive weapons or equipment for the body: To fasten on tightly.

"And some who spurs had first braced on."

Scott: Lord of the Isles, vi. 21.

(4) Of a drum: To make tense; to strain up.

"The tympanum is not capable of tension that way, in such a manner as a drum is braced."—Holder.

(5) Of the yards of a vessel. [II. 2., Naut.]

2. Figuratively:

*1) Of a person or an animal: To embrace, to encompass.

"For bigge Bulles of Basan brace him about."

Spenser: Shep. Cal., ix.

(2) Of a place personified: [Corresponding to I. 1. (2).] To cause to embrace, to make to surround, to place around.

"Mont Blanc is monarch of mountains,
They crown'd him long ago,
On a throne of rocks, in a robe of clouds,
With a diadem of snow.
Around his waist are forests braced."

Byron: Manfred, i. 1.

(3) Of the nerves, or of the mind, as depending on them. [Corresponding to I. 1 (3).] To render tense, to impart vigor to. Used—

(a) Of the nerves.

"Ne were the goodly exercises spar'd,
That brace the nerves, or make the limbs alert."
Thomson: Castle of Indolence, ii. 9.

(b) Of the mind as dependent on the nerves.

"And every moral feeling of his soul Strengthen'd and braced, by breathing in content."
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. i.

"... more salutary bands which might perhaps have braced his too delicately-constituted mind into steadfastness and uprightness."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xv.

(c) Yet more fig.: Of the "nerves" of a government or other collective body.

"In truth to brace anew the nerves of that paralyzed body would have been a hard task even for Ximenes."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xix.

II. Technically:

1. Carpentry, Joinery, &c.: To affix "braces" to beams; to hold them together, or support them.

2. Naut. (of the yards): To move around by means of braces.

"Then the yards were braced, and all sails set to the west-wind."

Longfellow: Courtship of Miles Standish, v.

¶ (1) To brace about: To turn the yards round with the view of sailing on the contrary tack.

(2) To brace in: To haul in the weather braces, so as to bring the yard more athwart ship.

(3) To brace sharp: To cause the yards to have the smallest possible angle with the keel.

(4) To brace to: To check or ease off the lee braces, and round in the weather ones, to assist in tacking.

(5) To brace up: To haul in the lee braces, so as to bring the yard nearer the direction of the keel.

brāced, pa. par. & a. [BRACE, v.]

I. Ord. Lang.: (See the verb.)

II. Her.: Interlaced.

brāce'-lēt (1), s. [In Sp. brazalete; Port. bracelete; Ital. braccialeto; all from Fr. bracelet, properly bracelet; dimin. of O. Fr. brachile (Kelham); Low Lat. brachile=an armlet, from brachium=the arm.] [BRACES, BRACHIAL.]

I. Ordinary Language:

*1. A piece of defensive armor for the arm. A "bracer." [BRACER.]

2. An ornament for the wrist, generally worn by ladies. It is distinguished from an armlet, the latter, as its name implies, being worn on the arm and not on the wrist.

"With bracelets of thy hair . . ."—Shakesp.: Mid. Night's Dream, i. 1.

"With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery."—Ibid.: Tam. of Shrew, iv. 3.

"Bugle bracelet, necklace amber."—Ibid.: Winter's Tale, iv. 4.

II. Technically:

1. Scripture:

(1) As worn by men:

(a) An armlet worn as the symbol of sovereign power. The Heb. word is etsadhah, from tsadth=to ascend. [ARMLET.]

"... and I took the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet [armlet] that was on his arm . . ."—2 Sam. i. 10.

(b) As the rendering of the Hebrew word pathil from pathal=to twist together. Gesenius and others believe it to mean a string by which a seal ring was suspended.

"And she said, Thy signet, and thy bracelets . . ."—Gen. xxxviii, 18.

"... the signet, and bracelets, and staff."—Ibid., 25.

(2) As worn on the wrist by women for ornament:

(a) The rendering of the Hebrew word tsamid, from tsamad=to fasten, to bind together.

"I put the earring upon her face, and the bracelets upon her hands."—Gen. xxiv, 47.

"... bracelets, rings, earrings."—Numb. xxxi, 50.

"And I put bracelets upon thy hands . . ."—Ezek. xvi, 11.

(b) The rendering of the Hebrew word Sherah=a chain, from sharar=to twist, to twist together; to be strong.

"The chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers."—Isaiah iii, 9.

Braced.

(c) The rendering of the Hebrew word chhachh, which Gesenius thinks means in the example a clasp, buckle, or pin for holding a lady's dress together.

"... and brought bracelets, and earrings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold."—Exod. xxxv, 22.

2. Her.: The same as barrulet (q. v.).

brāce'-lēt (2), s. [From Low Lat. bracelus=a hound [BRACHE], and -let, dimin. suffix.] A hound or beagle of the smaller or slower kind. (Wharton.)

brā'-cēr, *bra'-ser, s. [From brace, v. (q. v.) In Sw. brassar.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Gen.: That which braces anything up, a bandage.

2. Spec.: A defense for the arm, a brassart (q. v.). "Thorowe bracer of browne stele and the bryghte mayles." Morte Arthure, 4,247.

"Brasers burnyste boistet in sondrye."

Ibid., 1,859.

3. Slang: Applied to a drink of spirits; a dram.

II. Old Medicine:

1. A cincture, a bandage.

"When they affect the belly, they may be restrained by a bracer, without much trouble."—Wiseman.

2. A medicine of constringent power.

brā'-ceș, s. pl. [BRACE, s.]

brāce-ūp', v. i. To call up one's energies or power of endurance; to nerve one's self against despondency, disappointment, or disaster.

brāch, *brache, s. [In Dut. brak; (N. H.) Ger. brack, brache; O. H. Ger. bruceo; Fr. braque=a brach, a setting dog, a setter; a blunderer, a giddy person; Prov. brac; Sp. braco; Ital. & Low Lat. bracco=a setting dog. Cf. Scotch rache=a dog that discovers and pursues his prey by the scent; Icel. racke=a keen-scented dog.]

1. Originally: A bitch hound, a female hound.

"There are in England and Scotland two kinds of hunting dogs, and nowhere else in the world; the first kind is called a rache, and this is a foot-scenting creature both of wild-beasts, birds, and fishes also which lie hid among the rocks. The female hereof in England is called a brache; a brache is a mannerly name for all hound-bitches."—Gentleman's Recreation, p. 28. (Jamieson.)

"Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipped out, when Lady the brach may stand by the fire and stink."—Shakesp.: Lear, i. 4.

2. Afterward: A kind of dog pursuing its prey by the scent.

"Braches bayed therefore and breme noyse maked."

Sir Gaw. and the Green Knyght, 1,142.

"Brach Merriman, the poor cur is emboss'd;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd brach." Shakesp.: Tam. of Shrew, Induc., i.

brāch'-ēll, s. [From brach (q. v.).] A dog; properly, one employed to discover or pursue game by the scent. (Jamieson.)

"About the Park thai set on breid and lenth.

A hundreth men chargit in armes strang,
To kepe a hunde that thai had thaim amang;
In Gillisland thar was that brachell brede Sekyr off sent to folow thaim at fiede."

Wallace, v. 25. MS. (Jamieson.)

brāch'-ēl-ŷt'-ra, s. pl. [From Gr. brachus=short, and elytron=a cover; one of the two wing-cases of a beetle. [ELYTRON.] Animals with short wing-cases.]

Entom.: A large group of beetles characterized by having the elytra so short that they do not nearly cover the abdomen. Some make them a subsection of Pentamera, the tarsi of most, though not all, of the genera being five. Others, we think more justly, consider them a section by themselves, connecting the Coleoptera with the Dermaptera (Earwings). The Brachelytra have large membranous wings folded under the small elytra. They fly well. They are sometimes called Cocktails, from a habit they have of setting up their tails in a threatening attitude when menaced. The families are Pselaphidæ, Tachyporidæ, Staphylinidæ, Stenidæ, and Omalidæ (q. v.).

brāch'-en, s. [BRACKEN.]

brāch'-ēt, s. [O. Fr. brachet; dimin. of braque.] [BRACH.] A hound.

"Brachetes bayed that best, as bidden the maysterez."
Sir Gaw. and the Green Knyght, 1,603.

brāch'-ī-al, a. [In Fr. brachial; from Lat. brachialis=of or belonging to the arm; brachium; Gr. brachion=the arm.]

1. Science generally: Pertaining to the arms, or to one of them.

¶ (1) The brachial artery:

Anat.: The portion of the axillary artery between the shoulder and the elbow.

(2) The brachial plexus: [From Lat. plexus=a fold.]

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camel, hēr, thēre; pine, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rūle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

Anat.: The junction of the first dorsal and the lower cervical nerves from which those of the arm issue.

2. Bot.: Measuring twenty-four inches long, or what is conventionally assumed to be the length of the arm. (Lindley.)

brāch'-i-ate, a. [From Lat. brachiatus=with arm-like branches; brachium; Gr. brachiōn=the arm.]

Bot.: Presenting a certain resemblance to the extended arms of a man; that is, having horizontal branches standing forth nearly at right angles to a stem, and which, moreover, cross each other alternately; having opposite branches decussate. (Lindley, &c.)

brāch-in'-i-dæ, s. pl. [From brachinus (q. v.).]

Entom.: A family of predatory beetles belonging to the section Truncatipennes.

brāch-i'-nūs, s. [From Gr. brachunō=to shorten.]

Entom.: A genus of beetles, the typical one of the family Brachinidae (q. v.). The species have their head and thorax comparatively narrow. Their chief peculiarity is a power which they possess of expelling from their hinder extremity a pungent acrid fluid with a loud report. Hence Latreille called them Bombardiers, or Bombardier Beetles. [BOMBARDIER.]

brāch-i-ō-næ'-a, s. [From brachionus (q. v.).]

Zoöl.: A family of animalcules belonging to the class Rotifera.

brāch-i'-ōn-ūs, s. [From Gr. brachiōn, genit. brachionos=an arm.]

Zoöl.: The typical genus of the family Brachionæa (q. v.). It has a single eye, a furcate foot or tail, a smooth shell with six short spines in front. The family is to be found all over the world.

brāch-i-ōp'-ō-da, s. [From Gr. brachiōn=the arm, and oblique cases of pous, podos=a foot. Animals with arm-like feet. The reference is to two long ciliated arms developed from the sides of the mouth, which are used to create currents in the water and bring food within reach of their mouth.]

Zoöl. & Palæont.: One of the great classes into which the molluscous sub-kingdom of the animal kingdom is divided. The Brachiopoda are bivalves, with one shell on the back of the animal, and the other in front; these are called dorsal and ventral valves. The two valves are never equal in size. They differ from the Conchifera (called also Lamelli branchiata), or ordinary bivalves, in uniformly having one side of the same valve symmetrical with the other. In technical language, the Brachiopoda are inequivalve and equilateral, while the True Bivalves are equivalve and inequilateral. The organization of the Brachiopoda is inferior to that of the True Bivalves. They are attached to bodies by a pedicle which passes as the wick does in an antique lamp, whence the older naturalists called them "Lamp-shells." The shell is lined by an expansion of the integument or mantle. They are very important in a geological point of view, existing from the Cambrian rocks till now; but culminating apparently both in generic and specific development in the Silurian. In 1875 above 1,800 fossil species were known. In 1879 Dr. Alleyne Nicholson made a much higher estimate, considering that nearly 4,000 extinct species had been described. The recent species are comparatively few. They are all marine, occurring chiefly in the deep sea. The families are—(1) Terebratulidæ, (2) Spiriferidæ, (3) Rhynchonellidæ, (4) Orthidæ, (5) Productidæ, (6) Craniadæ, (7) Discinidæ, and (8) Lingulidæ (q. v.). (Woodward & R. Tate.)

A slightly different classification ranges the Brachiopods in two sub-classes—

(1) Inarticulata or Tretenterata: Fam. (1) Craniadæ, (2) Discinidæ, (3) Lingulidæ.

(2) Articulata: Fam. (1) Terebratulidæ, (2) Rhynchonellidæ, (3) Theciidæ, (4) Spiriferidæ, (5) Pentameridæ, (6) Strophomenidæ, and (7) Productidæ.

brāch'-i-ō-pōde, s. [BRACHIOPODA.] A mollusk belonging to the class Brachiopoda (q. v.).

¶ The age of the Brachiopods: The Silurian period.

brāch-i-ōp'-ō-dous, a. [Eng. brachiopod(e); -ous.] [BRACHIOPODA.]

1. Having arm-like feet.

2. Pertaining to the Brachiopoda.

brāch-i-um, s. [Lat., an arm, particularly the forearm, from the hand to the elbow. In Gr. brachiōn.]

Bot.: An ell, ulna, twenty-four inches, considered to be the average length of the arm in men.

Brach'-man (1), (ch silent), s. [BRAMIN.]

Brach'-man (2), (ch silent), s. [BRAHMAN.]

brāch-ŷ-cāt-a-lēc'-tīc, s. [Lat. brachycatalecticum; from Gr. brachykatalektos, as adj.=ending with a short syllable, short by a foot; brachys=short, and katalektikos=leaving off, stopping.] [CATALECTIC.]

Greek and Latin Prosody: A verse wanting a foot; a verse wanting two syllables to complete it.

brāch-ŷ-çēph'-al-ic, a. [From Gr. brachys=short, and kephalikos=pertaining to the head; kephalē=the head.]

Anthropol.: Having a short head. The term was introduced by Retzius.

"... those [crania] exhumed from the Drift, and belonging to the brachycephalic type."—Darwin: Descent of Man, vol. i. (1871), pt. i., ch. iv., p. 125.

brāch-ŷ-çēph'-al-ŷ, s. [From Gr. brachykephalos=(1) short head, (2) a certain fish.]

Anthropol.: Shortness of head. It is opposed to dolichocephaly.

"Welcker finds that short men incline more to brachycephaly, and tall men to dolichocephaly. . . ."—Darwin: Descent of Man, vol. i. (1871), pt. i., ch. iv., p. 148.

brāch-ŷ-ç'-ēr-a, s. pl. [Gr. brachys=short, and keras=a horn. Shorthorned animals.]

Entom.: A sub-order of Diptera, consisting of two-winged flies with short "horns" or antennæ, having only three joints, the last one commonly with a long bristle. It contains seven families—Cestridæ, Muscidæ, Dolichopidæ, Syrphidæ, Therevidæ, Leptidæ, Stratiomydæ, Bombyliidæ, Anthracidæ, Acroceridæ, Empidæ, Hybotidæ, Asilidæ, Mydasidæ, and Tabanidæ. (See these terms; also BRACHYSTOMA, NOTACANTHA, and TANYSTOMA.) The sub-order Brachycera includes the greater part of the Dipterous order.

brāch-ŷ-ç'-ēr-ūs, s. [Gr. brachys=short, and keras=a horn. Animals with short "horns" or antennæ.]

Entom.: A genus of Curculionidæ (Weevils) consisting of wingless, very rough insects, living on the ground. They occur in Africa and the South of Europe.

brāch-ŷ-chī'-tōn, s. [From Gr. brachys=short, and chitōn=an undergarment.]

Bot.: A genus of plants belonging to the order Sterculiadae (Sterculiads). It consists of trees found in the more tropical parts of Australia. Brachychiton acerifolium is called the Flame-tree, its red flowers having an aspect like flame when viewed from a little distance. The aborigines make fishing-nets from its bark. B. populneum is used for a similar purpose, besides which its seeds are eaten. (Treas. of Bot.)

brāch-ŷ-cō'-mē, s. [From Gr. brachys=short, and komē=the hair.]

Bot.: A genus of composite plants. Tribe, Subuli-floræ. Brachycome iberidifolia is the Swan River Daisy.

brāch-ŷ-dī-āg'-ōn-al, s. [Gr. brachys=short, and Eng. diagonal (q. v.).]

Geom.: The shortest of the diagonals in a rhombic prism.

"... the shorter lateral or brachydiagonal . . . the longer lateral or macrodiagonal [of a rectangular prism with replaced edges and angles]."—Dana: Mineralogy (5th ed.), Introd., p. xxv.

brāch-ŷ-glōt'-tis, s. [From Gr. brachys=short, and glōttis=the glottis, the mouth of the windpipe.]

Bot.: A genus of composite plants allied to Senecio. The leaves of Brachyglottis Forsteri, called by the natives of New Zealand Puka-Puka, is used by them for paper.

brāch-ŷg'-raph-ēr, s. [In Ger. brachygraph; from Gr. brachys=short, and graphō=to write.] A shorthand writer.

"At last, he asked the brachygrapher, whether he wrote the notes of that sermon, or something of his own conception."—Gayton: Notes on D. Quixote, i. 8.

brāch-ŷg'-raph-ŷ, s. [In Ger. brachygraphie; from Gr. brachys=short; and graphē=delineation, writing.] Shorthand writing, stenography.

"All the certainty of those high pretenders, bating what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny."—Glanville.

brāch-ŷl'-ō-gŷ, s. [In Gr. brachylogia=brevity in speech; brachylogeō=to be short in speech; brachys=short, and logos=a word, speech.]

Rhet.: Brevity of speech, expression of one's meaning in few words; laconic speech, like that of the ancient Spartans.

¶ Brachylogy of comparison: A figure of speech used principally by the Greek poets, but also found more or less in all languages, in which the object of comparison is not compared with the proper corresponding object, but is directly referred to the thing or person of which that object would be, if expressed, the attribute. Thus in the lines—
"They for their young Adonis may mistake
The soft luxuriance of thy golden hair," the hair is compared directly with Adonis. The figure is also known to grammarians as comparatio compendiaria.

brāch-ŷ-ō-pa, s. [Gr. brachys=short, and ops, or ōps=the eye, the face, the countenance.]

Entom.: A genus of two-winged flies of the family Syrphidæ.

plate of metal or gold-leaf.]

1. Bot.: A leaf growing upon the flower-stalk.

Those which occupy this situation have, as a rule,

a different size, form, and appearance from the ordinary leaves. There are cases, however, in which it is difficult to decide to which of these a particular foliaceous expansion is to be referred, and at times a yet greater uncertainty prevails as to whether one of those situated close to the flower is a bract or a sepal.

The involucre in composite plants, the great spathe in Araceæ, the paleæ of grasses, the scales of catbrāg'-gīng, brāg'-īng, pr. par., a. & s. [BRAG, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & part. adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As substantive:

1. Boasting, arrogance.

"Howbeit he nothing at all ceased from his bragging, but still was filled with pride, breathing out fire in his rage against the Jews, and commanding to haste the journey."—2 Maccabees, ix. 7.

2. Loud blowing, noise.

"Thair wes blaving of bemys, bragging and beir."
Gaw. and Gol., ii. 13.

brāg'-gīng-lȳ, adv. [Eng. bragging; -ly.] In a bragging manner, boastfully, ostentatiously.

"None bewail more braggingly Germanicus' death in outward show than such as in their hearts are most glad."—Grenoway: Tacitus; Annales, p. 53.

brāg'-gīr, s. [Etym. doubtful. Cf. Gael. braigh=the top, the summit, or braigh, v.=to give a crackling sound; Dan. brage=to crack, to crash, brag, bragen=crack, crash, crackling noise.] The old name given in the island of Lewis, one of the British Western Isles, to the broad leaves of the Alga Marina (now supposed to be Fucus nodosus).

"They continue to manure the ground until the tenth of June, if they have plenty of Braggir, i. e. the broad leaves growing on the top of the Alga Marina."—Martin West. Isl., p. 54.

brăg'-wört, brēg'-wört, s. [BRAGGET.] Mead, a beverage made from the dregs of honey.

"To learn that the Scottish bregwort, or mead, so plentiful at a harvest supper, is the self-same drink with which the votaries of Kimmon cheered themselves may well alarm a devout mind." &c.—Blackwood's Mag., Jan., 1821, p. 405.

Brah'-ma, *Bra'-ma, †Brah'-man, s. [Ger., &c., Brama, Brahma; in Mahratta and the modern languages of India, Brāhmā, from Sanscrit Brāhman, not Brahmán=a member of the Hindoo sacred caste; but (1) Neut.=force, power, will, wish, the propulsive force of creation; (2) Masc.: (a) Self; (b) The being Brahma (see def.). (Max Müller: Chips from a German Workshop, vol. i. (1867), pp. 70-1.)]

Hindu Mythol.: The first person of the Hindu triad, the others being Vishnu and Siva. Speaking broadly, the first is the Creator, the second the Preserver, and the third the Destroyer. The first is scarcely worshiped, except at Pokher, in Ajmere, and Bithoor in the Doab, the residence of the infamous Nana Sahib. He is represented as a man of a red color, with four faces. He has in general four hands, in one of which he holds a portion of the Vedas, in one a lustral vessel, in one a rosary, and in one a sacrificial spoon. For the present state of his worship see BRAHMANISM.

"When Brama's children perish'd for his name,"

Campbell: Pleasures of Hope, pt. i.

Brah'-ma (2), s. & a. [BRAHMAPOOTRA.]

Brahma-fowl, s. [BRAHMAPOOTRA-FOWL.]

Brah'-man, Brah'-mīn, *Bra'-mīn, *Brachman, s. & a. [In Sw. &c., Bramin; Ger. Bramine, Brachmane; Fr. Bramin, Bramine, Bracmane; Sp. & Port. Bramin, Bramine, Brachmane; Ital. Bramino; Lat. pl. Brachmanae, Brachmanes; Gr. Brachmanes; Mahratta Brāhman; Sanscrit Brahmán, not Brāhman=Brahma (q. v.)=a member of the sacred caste, from Brāhman=Brahma (q. v.)]

A. As substantive:

1. Originally: One of the Aryan conquerors of India who discharged priestly functions, whose ascendancy, however, over his fellows was intellectual and spiritual, but not yet political or supported by the caste system.

2. Now: One of the four leading castes of India, the others, theoretically at least, being Kshatryas (Warriors), Vaisyas (Merchants), and Sudras (Laborers), not reckoning outcasts beyond the pale. [CASTE.] [For the rise of the Brahmins see BRAHMANISM.] The Brahmins in many places at present are about a tenth part of the community. They are the most intellectual of all castes, having great mental subtlety. They are admirably adapted for metaphysical speculation and for mathematical reasoning; but throughout their vast literature they have almost uniformly told monstrous myths in lieu of history. Nor do they care much for natural science. [BRAHMANISM.]

"... the language of the Brahmins." [Sic, illustrating one form of the pl. of Brahman, now generally disused.—Ed.]—Mill: Hist. Brit. India, i. 334.

"The worshipers of Agni no longer form a distinct class, a few Agnihotra Brahmins, who preserve the family, may be met with."—H. H. Wilson: Religion of the Hindus.

B. As adjective: In any way pertaining to a member of the caste described under A.

† Brahmana beads, Brahman's beads: A name given in India to the corrugated seeds of Elæocarpus, used by the Brahmins and others as necklaces. They are sometimes worn as beads by children in East London, having been brought from India by seafaring relatives or friends.

Brahman bull, Brahminy bull, s. The Zebu, a variety of the Bos taurus, or Common Ox. It is distinguished by having a large fatty hump on its shoulders. Divine honors are paid to it in India, and it is deemed an act of piety to turn one loose in the streets, without any provision for its maintenance. It therefore helps itself from green-grocers' stalls or from gardens. It is not, as a rule, dangerous to pedestrians, but at times has warlike encounters with its humped compeers, besides systematically persecuting all cattle destitute of a hump. It is unpopular with those who are not of the Hindoo faith, but they dare not for their lives openly injure it.

Brah'-man-ī, s. A female Brahman; the wife of a Brahman. Also written Brahminee.

Brah'-mān-ic, Brah'-mīn-ic, a. [From Brahman, Brahmin, and suff. -ic. In Fr. Brahmanique.] Pertaining to Brahmins or to Brahmanism.

"... the corruption of the Brahminic religion."—Mosheim: Ch. Hist., trans. by Murdoch, ed. 1865, p. 716. (Note.)

"The earlier systems of brahmanic philosophy."—Max Müller: Chips from a German Workshop, vol. i. (1867), p. 225.

Brah-mān-ī-çal, Brah-mīn-ī-çal, a. [From Brahmanic, Brahminic; -al.] The same as BRAHMANIC (q. v.).

Brah'-man-işm, Brah'-mīn-işm, s. [From Eng., &c., Brahman, Brahmin, and suff. -ism. In Ger. Brahmanism; Fr. Brahmanisme.]

Theol., Hist., & Phil.: The system of religious belief and practice introduced and propagated by the Brahmins. This greatly varied with the lapse of ages, but to every successive form of it the name Brahmanism may be applied.

The earliest inhabitants of India seem to have been mainly Turanians. [TURANIAN.] When, at a very remote period of antiquity, these entered the peninsula, an Aryan nation or tribe existed in Central Asia, northwest of India, speaking a language as yet unrecognized, which was the parent of nearly all the present European tongues, our own not excepted. At an unknown date a great part of this Aryan nation migrated to the northwest, and settled in Europe, the remainder taking the contrary direction, and entering India by the way of the Punjab. [ARYAN.] Admiring the glorious Eastern sky, they applied to it, and to the elements of nature, glowing adjectival epithets; these gradually became abstract substantives, then the qualities expressed were personified, and gods ruling over the several elements were recognized. Thus the sky was first called Deva, adj.=(1) bright, then (2) brightness, next (3) the Bright God; or, if the adjectival meaning be retained, Divine. This is the familiar Lat. Deus=God. Similarly Dyaus=the sky, is Gr. Zeus, genit. Dios, from Dis, Latin Dies piter=Jupiter. Other divinities worshiped were, Agni=fire (Lat. ignis), Surya=the sun, Ushas=the dawn [Gr. ēōs], Marut=storm (Lat. Mars), Prithivi=the earth, Ap=the waters, Nadi=the rivers, Varuna=the sky [Gr. ouranos], Mitra=the sun, and Indra=the day. These gods are invoked in the 1,017 hymns of the Rig-Veda, the oldest Aryan book in the world. Dr. Haug, of the Sanscrit College at Poonah, thinks the oldest of these may have been composed and uttered from 2400 to 2000 B. C., or at least from 2000 to 1400 B. C. Max Müller, the translator of the Rig-Veda, more moderately dates most of them between 1500 and 1200 B. C., believing the collection to have been finished about 1100 B. C. [RIG-VEDA, VEDA.]

Whilst the Aryans were in the Punjab a religious schism took place amongst them, and a large number of them left India for Persia with feelings so bitter that what their former friends left behind called gods they transformed into demons. The venerable Deva=God, was changed into daēva=an evil spirit. Iran (Persia) was the place to which the seceders went, and there their faith developed into Zoroastrianism (q. v.). (See also Zend-avesta.)

The Rig-Veda was followed by three more, the Yajur-veda, the Sāma-veda, and the Atharva-veda, each with a Sanhit or collection written in poetry, and Brāhmanas and Sātras, prose compositions; but these are not so valuable as the Rig-Veda for tracing the old beliefs.

From about 1000 to 800 B. C. collections were being made of the old sacred literature. From about 800 to 600 B. C. the Brahmanas were composed (Dr. Haug thinks between 1400 and 1200 B. C.). Then the Sutras (exegetical compositions), which follow, make Brahmanas as well as Mantras divine.

The exact date of the two great epic poems—the Ramayana and the Mahabharat—is unknown; but the former is believed to be the older. By the time that it appeared the constellation of Vedic gods had set, and one of deified heroes was arising or had arisen. Rama, the deified King of Ayodhya (Oude), the hero of the former poem, is still extensively worshiped, along with Hunooman, the monkey god, and Krishna, the hero of the Mahabharat.

During the period of the Brahmanas, the Brahmanic priesthood had arisen to great power; during that of the Sutras they were in quiet enjoyment of their caste dignity. By the sixth century Buddha had arisen to preach the equality of all castes, and his system was dominant in India from about 250 B. C. till 750 A. D., that is, for a thousand years. [BOODDHISM.]

When Brahmanism reasserted its sway the Hindoo triad of gods—Brahma, Vishnu, and Shiva—had arisen (see these words). Nay, Brahma had become almost obsolete, and the respective advocates of Vishnu and Shiva were at variance. Between the twelfth and the sixteenth centuries monastic reformers formed sects, some Vishnuvite, others Sivaite. New sacred books, called, however, Puranas (meaning old), are penned to advocate the tenets of conflicting sects, and, though contradicting each other, were accepted as divine. The Mohammedan invasion somewhat repressed their quarrels. [PURANAS.] At present, the worship of Vishnu under the forms of Krishna and of Rama, and of Siva under that of the Lingam with the veneration of Sukti, the power and energy of the divine nature in action; to which must be added the adoration of Hunooman, Rama's friend; and in many places of aboriginal Turanian gods, are the most prevalent forms of popular Hinduism. Reformers are falling back on the Vedas, and Christianity obtains converts from it in every part of the land.

Brah'-mān-ist, s. [From Eng., &c. Brahman; and suff. -ist.] A professor of the Brahmanic faith. [BRAHMANISM.]

"Berghard, in his 'Physical Atlas,' gives the following division of the human race according to religion . . . Brahmanists . . . 13'4 per cent."—Max Müller: Chips from a German Workshop, vol. i., p. 215. (Note.)

2. Naut.: To haul up into the brails, to truss up with the brails. (Followed by up.)

"Cheerily, my hearties! yo heave ho! Brail up the mainsail, and let her go." Longfellow: The Golden Legend, v.

bräin, bräine, bräyn, bräyne, s. & a. [A. S. brægen, brægen; Dut. brein; O. Dut. bregen; O. Fries. brein. Cf. Gr. bregma, bregmos, brechmos, brechma=the upper part of the head.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally: The soft mass contained within the cavity of the skull, the encephalon. [II., 1.]

"Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain." Shakesp.: Macb. ii. 1.

(1) In this sense it may be used in the plural, when the brains of different individuals, human or animal, are compared to each other.

"... at no period of life do their brains perfectly agree."—Darwin: Descent of Man, vol. i. (1871), pt. 1, ch. i., p. 3.

(2) When only one individual is referred to.

"Voices were heard threatening, some that his brains should be blown out, . . ."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xii.

2. Figuratively: The intellect.

"... the brain devise laws . . ." Shakesp.: Mer. of Ven., i. 2.

¶ In this sense used also in the plural.

"... to beat this from his brains, . . ." Shakesp.: Hen. VIII., iii. 2.

¶ To cudgel the brains: To stimulate the faculty of attention, with the view of solving an intellectual difficulty which could not be satisfactorily disposed of in one's ordinary listless mental state.

II. Technically:

1. Anat.: That part of the nervous system contained within the cranium, or encephalon, the central part of the nervous system, composed of the cerebrum, cerebellum, and medulla oblongata (q. v.). It is formed by the continuity of the fibers of the spinal cord upward to the cephalic centers.

¶ (1) Compar. Anat.: The center of the nervous system in the lowest of the animals which possess a brain is in the form of a double cord; a step higher, and knots or ganglia are developed on one extremity of the cord. Such is the rudimentary structure of brain in the lowest vertebrata. In the lowest fishes the anterior extremity of the double cord shows a succession of five pairs of ganglia; in the higher fishes and amphibia the first two become fused into a single ganglion; then follow only three pairs of symmetrical ganglia. This carries us up in the animal scale to mammalia (q. v.); for instance, in the dog and cat we find a single ganglion, cerebellum, then three pairs following each other, and the primitive ganglia of opposite sides, at first separate, become united by means of transverse fibers, commissures (commissura=a joining), for associating in function the two symmetrical portions. Hence the deduction that the brain in the lower animals consists of primitive cords, primitive ganglia upon these cords, and commissures which connect the substance of adjoining ganglia and associate their functions.

(2) Human Anatomy:

(a) In the foetus: In the human foetus, the earliest sign of the spinal cord is a pair of minute longitudinal filaments side by side; on the anterior extremity of these five pairs of minute swellings are seen, not in a straight line, as in fishes, but curved on each other to correspond with the future cranium. The posterior pair soon become cemented on the middle line, forming one; the second pair also unite; the third and fourth, at first distinct, are soon veiled by a lateral development arching backward to conceal them; and the anterior pair, at first small, become less and almost lost in the development of the other pairs; so that the architecture of the human brain is the same as that of the lower animals, but progressive. [ARCHEN-CEPHALA.]

(b) In the adult: In the adult the primitive cords, described under 2 (a), have become the spinal cord, at the upper extremity they separate under the name of crura cerebri; the first pair of ganglia, developed from the primitive cords, have become the cerebellum; the second pair (the optic lobes of animals) become the corpora quadrigemina of man; the third pair, the optic thalami, and the fourth, the corpora striata, are the basis of the hemispheres, which, the merest lamina in the fish, have become the largest portion, the cerebrum, of the brain in man; the fifth pair (olfactory lobes), so large in the lowest forms, dwindle into the olfactory bulbs of man. The brain is composed of fibers or fasciculi ranged in some parts longitudinally, in others interlaced at various angles by cross fibers, and connected and held together by a delicate areolar web, which is the bond of support of the entire organ. It is enveloped by three lining membranes, the dura mater, the arachnoid, and the pia mater (q. v.). The brain substance is of two kinds, differing in density and color, a gray or cineritious or cortical substance, and a white or medullary substance. The gray substance forms a thin lamella over the entire surface of the convolutions of the cerebrum, and of the laminae of the cerebellum, hence it has been named cortical; but it is likewise found in the center of the spinal cord through its entire length, thence through the medulla oblongata, crura cerebri, thalami optici, and corpora striata; also in the locus perforatus, tuber cinereum, commissura mollis, pineal gland, pituitary gland, and corpora rhomboidea. As clearly shown by Dr. Sieveking, there is a peculiar property in the white matter of the brain, namely, the great elasticity of the medullary substance, and the resiliency afforded by this is the counterpoise of the rigid structures enveloping the brain, and which do not, as erroneously supposed, remove it entirely from the influence of atmospheric pressure.

The microscopic elements of the brain are white nerve-fibers from $\frac{1}{1000}$ to $\frac{1}{100}$ of an inch in diameter; gray nerve-fibers, one-half or one-third less than the white in diameter (Heule); nerve-cells, between $\frac{1}{100}$ and $\frac{1}{10}$ of an inch in diameter; and nerve-granules, between $\frac{1}{1000}$ and $\frac{1}{100}$ of an inch in diameter, with a variable number of pigmentgranules. The division of nerves into cranial and spinal is purely arbitrary, for with respect to origin, all but the first (the olfactory) proceed from the spinal cord or its immediate prolongation into the brain.

The weight of the human brain, according to Sæmmering, is 2 lbs. 5½ oz. to 3 lbs. 1 oz. 7 drs.; Dr. Aitken says from 30 to 52 ounces, with a bulk of from 65 to 84 cubic inches. Dr. John Reid states that there is an average difference of 5 oz. 11 drs. in favor of the male brain. According to Sæmmering, the largest brain of a horse is 1 lb. 7 oz.; that of an elephant dissected by Sir Astley Cooper had a weight of 8 lbs. 1 oz.; and Rudolphi found that of a common whale (Balæna mysticetus), 75 feet long, to weigh 5 lbs. 10½ oz.

The average sp. gr. of healthy brain is 1.036; mean of gray matter, 1.034; of white, 1.041. Its blood supply is derived through the pia-mater membrane.

2. Chem.: The chemical constituents of the brain are albumen; fatty matter, including two acid compounds containing a large amount of phosphorus, from eight to ten parts in 1,000, or one-twentieth to one-thirtieth of the whole solid matter; also salts, and from four-fifths to seven-eighths of water.

3. Physiol.: The organ for manifestation of the intellectual faculties, such as the emotions, the passions, and volition, and also of sensation. The evolution of nerve-force connected with mind emanates directly from the hemispherical ganglia. The spinal cord, by its connection with the brain, is the essence of combined movements. The brain alone furnishes conditions necessary for intelligence; the spinal cord for movement; and together they connect the balancing and co-ordination of motor and sensic power.

4. Path.: The chief diseases of the brain are—abscess of the organ, aphasia (in which the anterior lobes are affected, with difficulty of expressing thought), apoplexy (q. v.), brain fever, cancer, concussion and compression, epilepsy, hydrocephalus, hysteria, headache, induration, insanity, paralysis, softening, sunstroke, and tumors (q. v.).

B. As adjective: Relating to the brain in any of the foregoing senses. (See the compounds which follow.)

[Obvious compound: Brain-development. (Darwin: Descent of Man, pt. i., vol. i.)

brain-born, a. Generated by one's own brain or mind.

"Each hath his pang, but feeble sufferers groan With brain-born dreams of evil all their own."

Byron: Child Harold's Pilgrimage, ii. 7.

brain-bred, a. Engendered in or sprung from the brain.

"Love's brain-bred girl."—J. Taylor: Works (1630), p. 111.

brain-case, s. The part of the skull which encases the brain.

brain-child, s. An idea.

"A brain-child of my own."—B. Jonson: New Inn, i. 1.

brain-fever, s. A term in common use for inflammation of the lining membranes of the brain, meningitis; or of the brain itself, cerebritis. These are generally found in conjunction, seldom separate, and are termed phrenitis or encephalitis. Often associated (a) with tuberculosis, or scrofula; sometimes (b) with gout, rheumatism, or syphilis; in the first instance generally in the case of children and delicate young females, in the others chiefly in adult males; very frequently, also, from injury, or as a consequence of previous diseases. Brain-fever is characterized by violent headache, intolerance of light, excitement, extreme sensitiveness, hyperæmia, delirium, convulsions, and coma. These are the symptoms of cerebral irritation, which is often followed by cerebral depression. So real is the delirium that it cannot be distinguished from true perceptions.

brain-pan, s. The same as BRAIN-CASE (q. v.). [BRAIN-PAN.]

brain-wood, a. [BRAINWOOD.]

brain-worm, s. (Fig.) A worm infesting the brain. (Used in controversy contemptuously of an adversary.) (Milton: Colasterion.)

brain-wright, s. One who thinks or devises for another. (Halliwell: Cont. to Lex.)

brāin, v. t. [From brain, s. (q. v.)]

1. Lit.: To dash out the brains.

"There thou may'st brain him."

Shakesp.: Tempest, iii. 2.

2. Figuratively:

(1) To defeat. (Used of a purpose, &c.)

"That brain'd my purpose."

Shakesp.: Measure for Measure, v. 1.

(2) To conceive in the brain, to understand.

"Tongue and brain not."—Shakesp.: Cymbeline, v. 4.

brained, p. a. Possessed of brains. (Shakesp.)

brāindge, v. i. [Etym. doubtful.] To rush rashly forward.

"Thou never brāindg't, an' fetch't, an' fliskit,
But thy auld tail thou wad hae whiskit."

Burns: Auld Farmer to his Auld Mare Maggie.

brāin'-ish, a. [Eng. brain; -ish.] Brainsick.

"In this brainish apprehension, kills

The unseen good old man."—Shakesp.: Hamlet, iv. 1.

brāin'-less, brāin'-less, brāin'-lēs, a. [Eng. brain, and suff. -less.] Without intellect, dull, stupid. (Fig.)

"If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off."

Shakesp.: Troil., i. 3.

brāin'-pān, brāin'-pāne, s. [Eng. brain; pan.] The pan-like cavity, in other words the skull containing the brain.

"... my brain-pan had been cleft."—Shakesp.: 2 Hen. VI., iv. 10.

brāin'-sick, a. [A. S. brægen-seóc.]

1. Of persons: Of diseased brain or mind; not quite in one's mind, with the intellect touched; flighty, one-sided, injudicious.

"What! more fools still! Be ruled by me and go back, who knows whether such a brainsick fellow will lead you?"—Bunyan: P. P., pt. i.

2. Of things: The product of a diseased brain or mind.

"Because Cassandra's mad; her brainsick raptures Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel."

Shakesp.: Troil., ii. 2.

brāin'-sick-lȳ, adv. [Eng. brainsick; -ly.] In a brainsick manner, in such a way as one of diseased brain or mind might be expected to do; with lack of sound judgment.

"You do unbend your noble strength, to think

So brainsickly of things."

Shakesp.: Macbeth, ii. 2.

brāin'-sick-nēss, brāin'-sick-nēsse, s. [Eng. brain; sickness.] Sickness, or any affection of the brain, accompanied by more or less of mental disease.

"... brainsicknesses they entitle promptitude, quickness, and celerity."—Holland: Plutarch, p.
77. (Richardson.)

brāin'-stone,

s. [Eng. brain;

stone.]

Zoöl.: A name for the genus of corals called by naturalists Meandrina, in which the surface resembles the convolutions or meanderings of the human brain.

brāin'-wood, brayn'-wod, a. [O. Eng. brayn; Eng. brain; wod, wood=mad.] Mad, out of one's mind.

"Than brayde he braynwod."

William of Palerne, 2,096.

brain'-ȳ, a. [U. S. colloq.] Intellectual; having a well-developed and active brain.

†brāird, v. t. [From braird, s. (q. v.)] To spring up as seeds. (Ogilvie.)

brāis, v. t. [From Fr. bras=the arm.] [EM-BRACE.] To embrace.

"And leif ane uthir thy baggis to brais."

Dunbar: Bannatyne Poems, p. 56, st. 3.

brāise, s. [BRAIZE.]

brāise, v. t. [Fr. braiser=to bake.] To cook in a braising-pan.

brāis'-īng, s. & a. [BRAISE, v.]

Cookery: A term given to a process of cooking meat, which combines the advantages of baking and stewing. Properly speaking, it is performed in a braising-pan, which is a stew-pan with a closely-fitting lid constructed to hold live embers, so that the meat can be cooked from above and below simultaneously, though it is often done in an ordinary sauce-pan kept tightly closed.

braising-pan, s. A pan for cooking meat as described in BRAISING (q. v.).

brāit, s. [Cf. Wel. brith, m., braith, f.=mixed, motley, pied, speckled; Ir. breaith, breag=fine, comely (Mahn.).]

Jewelry: A rough diamond.

brāith, a. [O. Icel. bráthr=swift, headlong, furious; O. Sw. brather; Sw. bråd; Dan. bråd.] Violent, severe.

"Through the brāith blaw, all byrystyt owt of blud;

Butless to ground he smat him quhar he stud."

Wallace, xi. 171, MS. (Jamieson.)

brāith'-fūll, brēith'-fūl, a. [Scotch braith=breath (?); and Eng. suffix -ful(l).] Sharp, violent.

"In sum the greyf and iredyd fast habound, Rasyt wyth brāithfull stangis full unsound."

Doug.: Virgil, 379, 22.

brāith'-lȳ, brāith'-līe, a. & adv. [O. Icel. bradhligr; Scotch braith=breath; and -līe=Eng. suffix -ly.]

A. As adjective. Of wind: Violent.

"This goddes went, quhare Eolus the kyng
In gousty cauis, the windis loud quhisling
And brāithlie tempestis, by his power refranys."

Doug.: Virgil, 14, 46.

B. As adverb: Violently, with great force.

"Wness a word he mycht bryng out for tayne;
The bailfull ters bryst brāithly fra hys eyne."

Wallace, vi. 208, MS. Also iii. 375. (Jamieson.)

brāize (Eng.), brāise, brāze (Scotch), s. [A. S. bærs, bears=a perch, a wolfish or voracious fish (Somner); Sw. braxen=a bream; Dan. & Dut. brasse=a bream; Ger. brassen=a bream.]

1. English (of the form braize): Braize, the name of the Pagrus genus of fishes, and specially of the species Pagrus vulgaris, or Common Braize, called also the Becker, the Pandora, and the King of the Sea-breams. It belongs to the family Sparidae. It frequents the waters of the warmer portions of the temperate zones.

brāk, pret. of v. [A. S. bræc, pret. of brecan.] [BREAK, v.] Broke.

"I trow at Troye whan Pirrus brak the wal."

Chaucer: C. T., Man of Lawes Tale, 288.

brāk, s. [From Dut. braak=a breaking; O. Icel. brak=breaking, uproar.] An outbreak, uproar, riot.

"Ane uther sorte startis up faithles, every year embrayssing with great brak the faith of the starkast party."
—N. Winyelt: First Tractat. Keilh's Hist., App., p. 208.

brāke, pret. of v. [BREAK, v.]

"... he brake his mind to his wife and children."— Bunyan: P. P., pt. i.

brāke (1), brēāk (Eng.), brāik, brēāk (Scotch), s. & a. [In (N. H.) Ger. brache; L. Ger. brake=an instrument for breaking flax; Dut. braak=breaking, burglary, brake. From Dut. breken; Ger. brechen=to break.] [BREAK, v.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Originally: An instrument or machine to break flax or hemp. It is toothed.

"When it is dry enough, break it with your breaks, and afterward rub and scutch it."—Maxwell: Sel. Trans., p. 362.

2. A cross-bow.

"And summe scholde schete to the frensche rout with gunnes and bowes of brake."—Sir Ferumbas, 3,263.

"Not rams, nor mighty brakes, nor slings alone."

Fairf.: Tasso, xviii. 43. Also st. 64.

3. An instrument of torture.

"Had I that honest blood in my veins again, queen, that your feats and these frights have drained from me, honor should pull hard ere it drew me into these brakes."
—Beau. & Fletcher: Thierry & Theod., v. i.

4. The handle of a ship's pump.

5. A baker's kneading-trough.

6. A sharp bit or snaffle, a horse-bit.

7. A machine in which horses unwilling to be shod are confined during the operation.

(1) Lit. Of horses: In the foregoing sense.

(2) Fig. Of persons: A restraint, a curb of any kind upon liberty, the appetites, the passions, &c.
(or this may be the figurative sense corresponding to I., 6.)

"Who rules his rage with reason's brake."

Turberville.

"Drest, you still for man should take him,

And not think he had eat a stake,

Or were set up in a brake."

B. Jonson.

8. A large and heavy kind of harrow, chiefly used for breaking rough ground. (Scotch.)

"A pair of harrows, or brake for two horses, on the best construction, 1795, £2 2s.; 1809, £4."—Wilson: Renfr., p. 87.

II. Technically:

1. Machinery:

(1) The kneading-machine used by bakers. It consists, in some cases, of a pivoted lever operating on a bench.

(2) Any other machinery for effecting the same purpose.

(3) A friction-strap or band applied on the periphery of the drum of a hoisting-machine, crane, or crab.

2. Hydraulics: The extended handle of a fire-engine or similar pump, by which the power is applied. (Used especially of an extended handle at which a row of men can work together.)

3. Vehicles:

(1) A vehicle for breaking horses, consisting of the running-gears, and a driver's seat, without any carriage-body.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camēl, hēr, thēre; pine, pīt, sire, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rūle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

(2) A rubber pressed against the wheel of a vehicle to impede its revolution, and so arrest the descent of the vehicle when going down hill.

(3) The part of a carriage by which it is enabled to be turned. The fore-carriage.

4. Railroad engineering: A contrivance for stopping the motion of a car-wheel by friction applied thereto. Railway brakes are of various kinds. There are hand-brakes, air-brakes, &c.

A hand-brake is put in action by a winding drum connecting chains and levers, the power of the brakeman being applied to a hand wheel in the carriage. The air or atmospheric brake operates by means of compressed air. It can bring a train running forty-five miles an hour to a standstill within 250 feet.

5. Basket-making: An iron crotch with a sharp-edged, re-entering angle, adapted to peel the bark from osiers drawn therethrough.

B. As adjective: Adapted to, pertaining to, or in any way connected with a brake.

brake-beam, s.

Vehicles: The transverse beam connecting the shoes of opposite wheels. A brake-bar.

brake-block, s.

Railroad engineering: The block attached to the brake-beam and holding the shoe or rubber.

brake-shoe, s. That part of a brake which is brought in contact with the object whose motion is to be restrained.

brake-sieve, s.

Mining: A rectangular sieve operated by a forked lever or brake, from which it is suspended in a cistern of water for the agitation of comminuted ore. The meshes are of strong iron wire $\frac{1}{2}$ of an inch square. The brake is supported by a rolling axis. [JIGGER.] The poorest light pieces are cuttings. Pieces of poor, sparry, heavy ore are chats.

brake-wheel, s.

1. Railroad engineering: The wheel on the platform or top of a carriage by which the brakes are put in action.

2. Machinery: A wheel having cams or wipers to raise the tail of a hammer-helve.

brāke (2), s. & a. [L. Ger. brake=brake, brushwood; connected with Ger. brache=fallow-ground; Dut. braak (adj.)=fallow; Dan. brak=fallow, unplowed; and, perhaps, with Dan. bregne=fern-brake. Cf. also Wel. brug, brygan=growth, brake; Arm. brūk, brug=heath, heather; Ir. & Gael. fraoch=heath; Prov. bru=heath.] [BRACKEN.]

A. As substantive:

1. A thicket of brushwood or fern; a place overgrown with prickly or thorny shrubs, with brushwood or with fern.

(1) Literally:

(a) Overgrown with prickly or thorny shrubs, as brambles and briars, or with brushwood. [CANE-BRAKE.]

"That seem'd to break from an expanding heart:
'The untutor'd bird may found, and so construct,
And with such soft materials line, her nest,
Fix'd in the center of a prickly brake.'"
Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. v.

(b) Covered with a growth of the fern described under 2.

"And now at distance can discern
A stirring in a brake of fern;
And instantly a dog is seen Glancing from that covert green."
Wordsworth: Fidelity.

(2) Fig.: Trials, difficulties, afflictions.

"If I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person: let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through."
Shaksp.: Henry VIII., i. 2.

2. The English name of Pteris, a genus of ferns belonging to the order Polypodiaceæ. [PTERIS.] It is so called from growing abundantly in such brakes as those described under No. 1. The common brake, called, more especially in Scotland, the bracken, is very abundant in woods and on heaths, and constitutes quite a feature of the scenery in such localities. It forms an excellent covert for game, and where deer exist they love to be among it. The country people believe that, taken medicinally, it will destroy worms, and that to lie upon it will cure the rickets in children. Its astringent quality has led to its employment for dressing and preparing chamois leather, and the ashes are useful in the manufacture of soap and glass. It is sometimes spelled also brakes.

"Motley accoutrement—or power to smile
At thorns, and brakes, and brambles—and in truth,
More ragged than need was."
Wordsworth: Nutting.

¶ Brake of the wall: A local name of the fern Polypodium vulgare.

¶ Rock brakes: A name of the Parsley Fern, Allosorus crispus.

brake-fern, s.

1. Pteris aquilina.

2. Any other fern. (Ray.)

brake-nightingale, brake nightingale, s. A book-name for the Nightingale (Philomela luscinia). [NIGHTINGALE.]

brāke, *brak, a. [Dan. & Dut. brak; Ger. brack.] Brackish; somewhat salt.

"The entrellis sik fer in the fludis brake,
In your reverence I sall flyng and swake."
Doug.: Virgil, 135, 29.

brā'ke-būshe, s. [Eng. brake; O. Eng. bushe.] A brake of ferns.

"Brakebushe, or fernebrake. Filicetum, flicarium, UG. in filax."—Prompt. Parv.

brāke'-hōp-pēr, s. [Eng. brake; hopper.] A book-name for Sibilatrix, a genus of birds.

¶ Sibilom Brakehopper: A book-name for a bird, the Grasshopper Chirper (Sibilatrix locustella).

brāke'-mān, brāke's-mān, s. [Eng. brake, v.; man.]

1. Ord. Lang.: A man whose business it is to put on the brake, when it is required, in railway traveling.

2. Mining: The man in charge of the winding-engine.

brak-en, *brak-in, s. [BRACKEN.]

brak-ene, *brakenesse, s. [BRAKE (1).] A baker's pounding or crushing instrument.

"Bray, or brakene. Baxteris instrument. Pinsa, O. F."—Prompt. Parv.

brāk'-ēt, *brāg'-gēt, s. [BRAGGET.] A sweet drink made of the wort of ale, honey, and spices. It is called also bragwort.

"Hir mouth was swete as braket or the meth,
Or hord of apples, laid in hay or heth."
Chaucer: C. T.; Miller's Tale.

"One that knows not neck-beef from a pheasant, Nor cannot relish braggat from ambrosia."
Beaumont & Fletcher: Little Thief.

brāk'-īng, pa. par. & s. [BRAKE, v.]

A. As present participle: (See the verb.)

B. As substantive:

Flax-manufacture: An operation by which the straw of flax or hemp, previously steeped and grassed, is broken, so as to detach the shives or woody portion from the hair or useful fiber. [FLAX-BRAKE.]

braking-machine, s. A machine for braking flax or hemp, after rotting, to remove the woody portion and pith from the fiber.

brāk'-y, a. [From Eng. brak(e); -y.]

1. Lit.: Thorny, prickly, brambly; overrun with brushwood and fern.

2. Fig.: Choked up with other and rougher things; left in obscurity, hidden from view.

"Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats, where they lie hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure and open light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand."—Ben Jonson.

brāk'-yñ, v. t. [BREAK, v.]

"Brakyn' a-sunder cordys and ropis and other lyke. Rumpo."—Prompt. Parv.

brā-kýn, v. i. [O. Dut. braken; O. Icel. braka.] To vomit.

"Brakyn, or castyn, or spewe. Vomo, Cath. evomo."—Prompt. Parv.

brā'-kýnge, pr. par. & s. [BRAKYN.]

A. As pr. par.: (See the verb.)

B. As subst.: The act of vomiting.

"Brakynge, or parbrakynge. Vomitus, evomit."—Prompt. Parv.

brald, pa. par. [From Sw. pråld=bedecked; pråla=to cut a figure, to boast.] Decked, dressed; a term used of a woman, who is said to be—

"Rycht bravlie brald."

Maitland Poems, p. 319.

bral-len, v. i. [BRAWL, v.] (Town. Mysteries.)

bra'-mā (1), s. [Lat. brama.]

Ichthyol.: A genus of spiny-finned fishes belonging to Cuvier's family Squamipennes, meaning Scaly-finned fishes, now called Chætodontidæ. It contains but one species, the Brama Raiti, which is common in the Mediterranean, whence an occasional straggler finds its way to the British seas.

Bra'-mā (2), s. [BRAHMA.]

Bra'-mah, s. & a. [From Mr. Joseph Bramah, who was born at Stainborough, in Yorkshire, England, on April 13, 1749, and died December 9, 1814. See A.]

A. As subst.: Mr. Bramah, who invented the Bramah-lock, the Bramah-press, &c.

B. As adj.: Invented by Mr. Bramah.

Bramah-lock, s. A lock patented by Bramah, in England (1784 and 1798), having a number of slides which are adjusted in the manner of tumblers, by means of a stepped key, so that the slides of unequal length shall be brought into a position where their notches lie in the same plane, that of the locking-plate. [LOCK.]

Bramah-press, s. A machine designed to turn to account Pascal's Law [LAW] of the equality of pressure in a mass of liquid, by using water under pressure to produce a mighty force. It was patented by Mr. Bramah in 1796. It is called also the Hydraulic or Hydrostatic Press. It consists essentially of a large, very strong cylinder, in the collar of which a cast-iron piston or ram works water-tight. Above the ram is a movable cast-iron plate, and at some distance higher a fixed one, both being kept in their places by four strong columns. The portion of the cylinder beneath the ram is full of water, and is connected by a pipe with a small forcing pump. When the latter is put in action it compresses the water in it, and that pressure transmitted by the pipe to the large cylinder in which the ram works, acts equally on every part of it [PASCAL'S-LAW], with the practical effect of enormously increasing the original force. Thus, if the diameter of the piston in the forcing-pump is an inch, and that of the ram in the cylinder four feet, then the pressure on the latter is $(12 \times 4)^2 = 2,304$ times greater than that exerted by the former. Goods to be pressed—bales for cloth, for instance, or hay, are placed on the lower or movable plate, and are forced up against the fixed one. The portions of the Menai tubular bridge over the Menai strait, in Wales, were raised to their positions by means of a powerful Bramah-press.

bra-mā-thē'r-i-ūm, s. [From Brama, old spelling of BRAHMA (q. v.); Gr. thērion=wild animal.]

Zoöl. & Palæont.: A genus of Antilopidæ, consisting of a gigantic species with four horns. It is allied to Sivatherium, which also is four-horned. Both occur in the Upper Miocene, or Lower Pliocene beds of the Sewalik hills in India.

bra-man'-tip, s.

Logic: A mnemonic word denoting a syllogism of the fourth figure, with two universal affirmative premises and a particular conclusion.

brām'-ble, *brēm'-bil (Eng.), brām-ble, brām-mle, brām-mles (Scotch & O. Eng.), s. & a. [A. S. bremel, brember, bræmbel, brembel=(1) a brier, a blackberry bush, a bramble, a mulberry; (2) a tormenting (Bosworth). In Sw. brombär=a blackberry; Dan. bramber; Dut. braam; L. Ger. brummel-beere; (N. H.) Ger. brombeere; O. H. Ger. brāmal, brāma, f., brāmo, m.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of plants:

(1) Generally:

(a) The blackberry or any allied plant. [II. 1. Bot.]

"Doth the bramble cumber a garden? It makes the better hedge; where if it chances to prick the owner, it will tear the thief."—Greer: Cosmologia Sacra, bk. iii., ch. 2.

(b) The common dog-rose, Rosa canina. [BRAMBLE-FLOWER.]

(2) Fig.: Any thorny shrub.

"The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store."
Spenser.

2. Of animals: The same as brambling and bramble-finch (q. v.).

II. Technically:

1. Botany:

(1) The blackberry, Rubus fruticosus, or any closely allied species of the same genus. The shrub now mentioned runs into a number of well-marked varieties. The species are numerous. The raspberries are associated with the brambles in the same genus Rubus.

¶ Blue bramble (so called from the blue broom on the fruit): A book-name for Rubus cæsius. (Britten & Holland.)

Heath bramble: Rubus cæsius. (Lyte.)

Mountain bramble: Rubus Chamæmoriis. (Treasury of Bot.)

Stone bramble: A book-name for Rubus saxatilis. (J. Wilson.) (Britten & Holland.)

(2) The fruit of the bramble, called also blackberry.

†(3) A book-name for the whole genus Rubus, though it contains the raspberry as well as the bramble.

2. Scripture:

1. The rendering of Heb. atad, translated bramble in Judges ix. 14, 15, and thorns in Psalm lviii. 9. The former passage shows that it was little regarded, the latter that it was thorny and used as fuel. Atad is supposed to be the same as Arab. ausuj=a kind of buckthorn, and is probably a rhamnaceous plant, bōil, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, aș; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f. -cian, -tian = şan. -tion, -sion = şhñ; -tion, -şion = zhñ. -tious, -cious, -şious = şhş. -ble, -dle, &c. = bel, del.

Zizyphus spina Christi, because it is thought that from it was made the crown of thorns, which for purposes of insult and torture was placed around the forehead of Christ immediately before his crucifixion (John xix. 2, 5).

(2) The rendering of the Heb. chhoah in Isaiah xxxiv. 13, probably a thorny tree or shrub of the genus Prunus.

(3) [BRAMBLE-BUSH (2).]

B. As adjective: Consisting of or pertaining to the Blackberry (Rubus fruticosus) or any allied species of the genus. (See the compounds.)

bramble-bonds, s. pl. "Bonds" or bands made of the long shoots of the bramble. They were formerly used for thatching roofs. (Ogilvie.)

bramble-bush, s. [In Ger. brambeer-busch.]

1. Ord. Lang. & Bot.: The same as BRAMBLE (q. v.).

2. Scrip.: The rendering, in Luke vi. 44, of the Greek word batos=a bramble-bush. (Liddell & Scott.)

bramble-finch, s. The same as BRAMBLING (q. v.).

bramble-flower, *bramble-flour, s.

1. The flower of a bramble, Rubus fruticosus.

*2. The dog-rose, Rosa canina.

"The bramble-flour that berest the red hepe."

Chaucer: C. T., 13,676.

bramble-loop, s. The loop or curve made by the stem of a bramble when the extremity of the long and feeble branch has rooted itself in the ground.

"We have heard of cows that were said to be mouse-crope, or to have been walked over by a shrew-mouse (an ancient way of accounting for paralysis), being dragged through the bramble-loop . . ."—Prof. Buckman, in Treas. of Bot. (article Rubus).

bramble-net, s. A net to catch birds.

†brām'-bled, a. [Eng. brambl(e); -ed.] Thickly ~rown over with brambles.

"Beneath yon tower's unvaulted gate, Forlorn she sits upon the brambled floor."

T. Warton: Ode iii.

brām'-bling, *brām'-line, s. [From A. S. bremel (?).] A bird, Fringilla montifringilla, called also Bramble, Bramble-finch, Mountain-finch, and Mountain-chaffinch. [MOUNTAIN-FINCH, FRINGILLA.]

†brām'-blý, a. [Eng. brambl(e); -y.] Full of brambles.

"Hark, how they warble in that brambly bush,
The gaudy goldfinch, and the speckly thrush."

A. Phillips, Past. 4.

brāme, s. [Of. O. Eng. breme=severe, sharp; A. S. bremman=to rage, to roar.] Sharp passion.

"But that shee still did waste, and still did wayle,
That, through long languor and hart-burning breme,
She shortly like a pynded ghost became."

Spenser: F. Q., III., ii. 52.

bra'-mī-a, s. [From brami, the local name of the plant.]

Bot.: A genus or sub-genus of plants belonging to the order Scrophulariaceæ (Figworts). Bramia serrata has a slimy penetrating odor. It is used in Brazil in the preparation of bark for rheumatic patients. (Lindley.)

†Bra'-mīn (1), †Bra'-mīn-ēe, s., &c. [BRAHMAN, BRAHMINÉE, &c.]

Bra'-mīn (2), Brach'-man (ch silent), s. [In Ger. (sing.) Brachmane, Bramine; Lat. Brachmanus (pl. Brachmani); Pali Brahmana; O. Pali Bamhana, Bahmana, Babhana.] An ancient Indian sect mentioned by the Hindoo Buddha, the Greek historian Arrian, and the Latin father Ambrose, and generally identified by the classic writers with the Gymnosophists. It is matter of dispute whether they were identical with the members of the Indian sacerdotal caste now universally known as Brahmins or were of Buddhistic origin. Col. Sykes strongly maintained the latter view. (Journal Roy. Asiat. Soc., vol. vi., p. 361, &c.)

brān, *brāne, *bren, s. [From Fr. bran= (1) the thicker part of the husk of ground corn, (2) sawdust, (3) fecal matter; O. Fr., Pr. & O. Sp. bren=bran; Low Lat. brannum, brennum, bren; Wel., Ir. & Gael. bran=bran, husk; Arm. brenn.]

1. Lit.: The skins or husks of ground maize, wheat, rye, or other grain, separated from the flour. The nutritive value of these husks increases as we proceed from the outside of the grain toward the interior. The outer skin, or coarse bran, is very indigestible, owing to the presence of a layer of silica. The inner skins, called pollards, are more nutritious, containing from 12 to 15 per cent. of nitrogenous matter, and from 20 to 30 per cent. of starch. Unless, however, they are ground very finely, they are apt to set up irritation of the bowels and diarrhœa. Though rich in nitrogen, bran appears to possess but little nutritive power. It may be of use to those who are well fed, and need a laxative, but to the poor who need nourishment it is of very little use. It is, however, of some commercial value, being largely employed in the feeding of horses and cattle, and in brightening goods during the processes of dyeing and calico-printing.

"The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, . . ."—Hayward.

2. Figuratively:

"Nature hath meal and bran, contempt and grace.

I'm not their father; . . ."

Shakesp.: Cymbeline, iv. 2.

bran-duster, s.

Milling: A machine in which the bran, as turned out of an ordinary bolt, is rubbed and fanned to remove as much as possible of the flour which yet adheres to it.

brān, adv. [A contraction from brand.] (Used only in the expression bran-new.)

† Bran-new, i. e., brand-new: The brand was the fire, and brand-new was newly forged, fresh from the fire. It was equivalent to Shakespeare's fire-new. (Trench: English Past & Present, pp. 179, 180.)

" . . . a pair of bran-new velvetens, instead of his ancient thicksets."—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. i.

brānc, s. [Etymology doubtful.] A linen vestment like a rochet, formerly worn by women over their other clothing. (Ogilvie.)

brānc'-ard, s. [Fr. brancard=a litter, the shafts of a vehicle.] A horse-litter.

"The gentleman . . . proposed, that he would either make use of a boat to Newport or Ostend, or a brancard to St. Omer's."—Life of Lord Clarendon, iii. 891.

branch, *branche, *braunch, *braunche, s. & a. [From Fr. branche; Prov. branca (f.), and brenca (m.); Ital. branca; Low Lat. branca=the claw of a predatory animal; Wallachian brēncē=a forefoot; Arm. brank=a branch; Corn. brech=an arm; Wel. braich= (1) an arm, (2) a branch, (3) a verse.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: A shoot of a tree or other plant, especially one from the main boughs, which again divides into minor branches or branchlets.

"Branches of a tre. Palmes, C. F. (ramus, ramusculus, P.)"—Prompt. Parv.

"And then he pearcheth on some braunch thereby."

Spenser: The Fate of the Butterflie.

"By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation, which sing among the branches."—Ps. civ. 12.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Of things material:

(a) Anything extending like the branch of a tree from a central column or other support, as the divisions of a chandelier or anything similar.

"And six branches shall come out of the sides of it: three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side."—Exod. xxv. 32.

(b) Anything joining another one, to which it is subordinate.

(i) A chandelier, perhaps viewed as connected with, and subordinate to, the roof from which it hangs.

(ii) A river tributary to a larger one; a vein, artery, or anything similar joining another larger than itself; a tributary, an affluent.

"If, from a main river, any branch be separated and divided, then, where that branch doth first bound itself with new banks, there is that part of the river, where the branch forsaketh the main stream, called the head of the river."—Raleigh.

"His blood, which disperseth itself by the branches of veins, may be resembled to waters carried by brooks."—Ibid.

† In rural districts of the eastern portion of this country small streams and brooks are known uniformly as branches or runs.

(iii) A subsidiary line of railway.

(iv) A division of a stag's antler.

(2) Of things immaterial or abstract. Spec.:

(a) Of human or other descent.

(i) Any part of a family descending in a collateral line.

"His father, a younger branch of the ancient stock planted in Somersetshire, took to wife the widow."—Carew.

(ii) Offspring.

"Great Anthony! Spain's well-beseeming pride, That mighty branch of emperors and kings."

Crashaw.

(b) A part of a whole, a section or division of a subject, or anything similar.

"It will be desirable to begin with this branch of the subject."—Lewis: Astron. of the Ancients, ch. i. § 2.

II. Technically:

1. Bot.: One of the divisions into which a stem separates. Many names are applied to different modifications of branches, and it is on the character of the branches sent forth that the classification of plants into trees, shrubs, under-shrubs, and herbs, at least in part, depends. [See these terms.]

2. Arch.: Arches in Gothic vaults, constituting diagonals to other arches arranged in the form of a square, and themselves forming a cross.

3. Fortification:

(1) The wing, or long side of a horn or crown work.

(2) One of the parts of a zigzag approach.

4. Blacksmith's work: One of the quarters or sides of a horseshoe.

5. Harness-making: One of the levers attached to the ends of the stiff bit of a curb-bit, and having rings or loops for the curb-chain, the check-straps, and the reins. [CURB-BIT.]

6. Mining: A small vein which separates from the lode, sometimes reuniting. A leader, string, or rib of ore running in a lode.

7. Hydraulics: The metallic piece on the end of a hose to which the nozzle is screwed.

8. Gas-fixtures: A gas-burner bracket.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to the arm of a tree, or to the projecting part of anything.

branch-chuck, s.

Turning: A chuck having four branches, each of which has a set screw whose end may be made to impinge upon the object.

branch-leaf, s. A leaf growing on a branch.

branch-line, s. A subsidiary line of railway.

branch-peduncle, s. A peduncle growing from a branch.

branch-pilot, s. A pilot who (in this country) holds a public commission, known as a branch commission.

branch-spine, s.

Bot.: A spine on the branch of a plant, such as in the sloe, as distinguished from a leaf-spine, of which an example is presented by the holly thorn.

branch-work, s.
[BRANCHED-WORK.]

"Beneath branch-work of costly sardonyx, Sat smiling, babe in arm."

Branch-spine.

Tennyson: The Palace of Art.

branch, v. i. & t. [From branch, s. (q. v.)]

A. Intransitive:

1. Lit. Of trees: To separate into actual branches.

" . . . therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramid is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees."—Bacon.

2. Fig.: To separate into divisions. Used—

(1) Of material things. Spec., of a stag's horns: To separate into antlers.

(2) Of things immaterial or abstract:

" . . . that would best instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into farther distinctions."—Locke.

† To branch out:

(1) Lit. Of trees: To separate into branches.

(2) Figuratively:

(a) Of things material: To separate into divisions widely apart.

"The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Appenines that pass through the body of it, branch out on all sides, into several different divisions."—Addison.

(b) Of speaking or writing: To be diffuse, through not confining one's self to the salient points of a subject.

"I have known a woman branch out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat."—Spectator.

B. Transitive:

*1. To adorn with needlework, representing the branches of trees.

"In robe of lilly white she was arayd,
That from her shoulder to her heele downe raught;
The traine whereof loose far behind her strayd,
Branched with gold and perle most richly wrought."

Spenser: F. Q., II. ix. 19.

2. To part anything into divisions of branch-like form.

" . . . and are branched into canals, as blood is."—Bacon.

branched, pa. par. & a. [BRANCH, v.]

1. Ordinary Language: (See the verb.)

2. Bot.: Separating into many branches of some size. If they are small the term used of the plant is ramulose.

branched-work, s.

Arch.: Carved or sculptured branches or leaves in monuments or friezes.

bran'ch-ēr (1), s. [Eng. branch; -er.]

1. That which shoots out into branches. (See example under No. 2.)

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camēl, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marīne; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rūle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

2. One who develops fruitful progress in various directions.

"If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet he may yield, with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other."—Wotton.

branch-ēr (2), s. [Fr. branchier.]

Falconry: A young hawk.

"I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the eires, the brancher, and the two sorts of lentners."—Walton.

branch-ēr-ŷ, s. [From Eng. branch; -er; -y.]

Bot.: The ramifications of the vessels dispersed through the pulpy part of fruit.

brān'-chī-a, s. [In Fr. branchies. From Lat. branchia=a gill of a fish; pl. branchiæ=the gills of a fish; Gr. branchion=a fin; pl. branchia=the gills of a fish.]

Zoöl.: The gills of fishes and various other inhabitants of water. They are the apparatus for enabling the animal to extract oxygen from the water, instead of being dependent on the atmosphere for that life sustaining element.

brān'-chī-al, a. [In Fr. branchial; Mod. Lat. branchialis; from Lat. branchia; Gr. branchia=the gills.]

Zoöl.: Pertaining to the gills of a fish or other aquatic animal.

¶ (1) Branchial arches: Four bony arches which bear the branchiæ in fishes; they are connected inferiorly with the hyoid arch, and above are united with the base of the skull.

(2) Branchial hearts: Two contractile dilatations situated one at the base of each gill in the cuttlefishes.

"... the circulation is aided by two additional branchial hearts in the cuttle-fishes."—Woodward: Mollusca (1861), p. 30.

(3) Branchial sac: A series of quadrangular meshes fringed with vibratile cilia in tunicated mollusks. It is for respiration.

(4) Branchial sinuses: Two longitudinal sinuses in the Tunicated Mollusks, one along the hæmal and one along the neural side of the branchial sac.

brān'-chī-ā-ta, s. pl. [From Lat. branchiæ; Gr. branchia=gills.]

Zoölogy:

1. A primary division of the vertebrated sub-kingdom. It contains the Fishes and Amphibia. It is contradistinguished from Abranchiata, which comprises Reptiles, Birds and Mammals.

2. A division of Annelids, containing the Tubicola (Tubeworms), and the Errantia (Sandworms).

3. A name sometimes given to the division of Gasteropodous Mollusks, now commonly denominated Branchifera, or Branchiogasteropoda (q. v.).

"Here the stem is usually divided after a certain distance, and ramified into smaller sub-divisions called branches, and these again into branchiata and twigs."—R. Brown; Manual of Botany (1874), p. 72.

brān'-chī-āte, a. [From Lat. branchiæ; Gr. branchia=gills.]

Zoöl.: Having gills. (Index to Dallas' Nat. Hist.)

¶ The Branchiate, or Branchiferous Annelida, consists of two orders, the Tubicola and the Errantia. The Abranchiate Annelids, distinguished from the former, are also divided into two—The Suctorina, or Leeches, and the Scoleana, or Earthworms. (Dallas: Nat. Hist., pp. 94, 95.) [BRANCHIFEROUS.]

brān'-chīf-ēr-a, s. [From Lat. branchiæ=gills, and fero=to bear. Gill-bearing animals.]

Zoöl.: In some classifications: An order of gasteropodous mollusks, including all the species breathing by gills, while the air-breathers are ranked under the Pulmonifera, or lung-bearing mollusks. The Branchifera are divided into two sub-orders, the Opisthobranchiata and the Prosobranchiata (q. v.).

"The gasteropods form two natural groups, one breathing air (pulmonifera) and the other water (branchifera)."—Woodward: Mollusca, p. 98.

brān'-chīf-ēr-ous, a. [In Fr. branchifère. See branchifera, and suff. -ous.]

Zoöl.: Having branchiæ, breathing by gills. [BRANCHIATE.]

"The developments of the branchiferous gasteropods may be observed with much facility in the common river snails (Paludina)."—Woodward: Mollusca, p. 98.

†branch'-i-ness, s. [From Eng. branchy, and suff. -ness.] The quality of being branchy, the tendency to divide into branches, or the aspect presented when such division has taken place.

branch'-īng, pr. par. & a. [BRANCH, v.]

"Environ'd with a ring of branching elms."
Cowper: The Task, bk. i.

"The swift stag from under ground Bore up his branching head."
Milton: P. L., bk. vii.

"Wide o'er his isles the branching Oronoke Rolls a brown deluge."
Thomson: The Seasons; Summer.

brān'-chī-ō-gās-tēr-ōp'-ōd-a, s. pl. [From Gr. branchia=gills, gaster=the belly, and podes, pl. of pous=a foot.]

Zoöl.: A name sometimes given to those gasteropodous mollusks which breathe by gills. (Huxley: Classification of Animals. Glossary.) It is the same as branchifera (q. v.).

brān'-chī-ōp'-ōd-a, s. pl. [From Gr. branchia=gills, and podes, pl. of pous=a foot.] Having branchiæ attached to the feet.

Zoölogy:

1. Cuvier's first order of the sub-class Entomostraca. The genera included under it, such as Cyclops, Cypris, Apus, Limnadia, Branchipus, &c., are now generally ranked under several orders, viz., Copepoda, Ostracoda, and Phyllopoda. Milne Edwards places them under two, the Phyllopoda and the Cladocera. [See these terms.]

2. A division or "legion" of the sub-class Entomostraca. It includes the order Cladocera, Phyllopoda and Trilobita, perhaps with Mesostoma.

brān'-chī-ō-pōde, s. [In Fr. branchiopode.] [BRANCHIOPODA.]

Zoöl.: An animal belonging to the old order Branchiopoda.

brān'-chī-ōp'-ō-dous, a. [From Eng. branchiopod(e), and suff. -ous.]

Zoölogy:

1. Having branchiæ attached to the feet.

2. Pertaining to the branchiopoda.

brān'-chī-ōs'-tē-gāl, a. [In Fr. branchiostège; from Gr. branchia=gills, and stegos=a roof; from stegō=to cover closely; suff. -al.]

Zoöl.: Pertaining to the membrane covering the gills.

¶ Branchiostegal rays. Ichthy.: Parts of the hyoid apparatus supporting this membrane. (Huxley: Classification of Animals, Gloss.)

brān'-chī-ōs'-tege, s.

Ichthy.: The membrane or carapace covering the gills (branchiæ) of a fish or crustacean. It lies beneath the operculum, and is supported by rays or laminae to which the name branchiostege is also applied.

brān'-chī-ōs'-tē-gī (Mod. Lat.), brān'-chī-ōs'-tē-gans (Eng.), s. pl. [From Gr. branchia=gills, and stegos=a roof; from stegō=to cover closely.]

Ichthy.: An old order of fishes with free branchiæ and a cartilaginous skeleton. It was suppressed by Cuvier. (Griff. Cuvier, vol. x., p. 19, and note.)

brān'-chī-ōs'-tē-gite, s. The large flap of the carapace which covers the branchiæ or gills of a crustacean, as the lobster or crayfish.

brān'-chī-ōs'-tē-goūs, a. [From Gr. branchia=gills, stegos=a roof, and Eng. suff. -ous.]

Zoölogy:

1. Covering the gills. [BRANCHIOSTEGAL.]

2. Possessed of a membrane covering the gills.

brān'-chī-ōs'-tōm-a, s. [In Fr. branchiostome. From Gr. branchia=gills, and stoma=the mouth.]

Ichthy.: Costa's name for the very anomalous genus of fishes now called Amphioxus (q. v.).

brān'-chī-ōt'-ō-ca, s. pl. [From Gr. branchia=branchia; and tokos=bringing forth, birth; tiktō=to bring forth.]

Zoöl.: The name given by Professor Owen to a division of the Vertebrata comprehending the Batrachia and other Amphibia. He called them also Dipnoa (q. v.).

brān'-chī-pōd'-īd-æ, s. pl. [From Gr. branchia=gills; pous, genit. podos=a foot; and Lat. fem. pl. suff. -īd-æ.]

Zoöl.: A family of Entomostraca belonging to the order Phyllopoda. It contains the genera Branchipus and Artemia.

brān'-chī-pūs, s. [From Gr. branchia=gills, and pous=a foot.]

Zoöl.: A genus of small Entomostraca, the typical one of the family Branchipodidæ. Branchipus stagnalis is usually to be found in ditches of stagnant water.

brān'-chī-rēme, s. [From Lat. branchiæ=gills, and remus=an oar.]

Zoöl.: An animal which has legs terminating in a bundle of setiform branches, constituting a respiratory apparatus.

brān'-chīte, s. [Named after Prof. Branchi, of Pisa.]

Min.: A variety of Haitite. It is colorless and translucent, and is found in the brown coal of Mount Vasa, in Tuscany.

branch'-lēss, a. [From Eng. branch, and suff. -less.]

1. Lit.: Without branches.

Branchireme (Chirocephalus Diaphanus).

2. Fig.: Without any valuable product; naked.

"If I lose mine honor,
I lose myself; better I were not yours, brän'-dŷ, *bränd'-wine, *brän'-dŷ-wine, s. & a. [In Fr. brandevin; Gael. (from Eng.) brann-daioh; Sw. bränvin; Dan. brændevin; Ger. brandwein, branntwein. The first part is from Sw. branna; Dan. brænde; Dut. branden, all=to burn, to distill. Sw. brand=brand, fire-brand; Dan., Ger. & Dut. brand=fire, burning, conflagration. [BRAND, v. & s.] The second part is from Fr. & Sw. vin; Dan. viin; Ger. wein; Dut. wyn.] [WINE.]

A. As substantive:

1. Formerly. (Of the forms brandywine and brandwine, etymologically meaning burnt or distilled wine.) [BRANDY-WINE.]

2. Now. (Of the form brandy, being the adjective in the foregoing compound dissevered from its associate wine, and made to stand alone as a substantive.) A spirit produced by the distillation of both white and red wines, prepared chiefly in the south of France. A brandy highly esteemed is that of Cognac, which is obtained by distilling white wines of the finest quality. An inferior kind of spirit is frequently prepared from the "marc" of grapes and the refuse of wine vats. When first distilled it is as colorless as alcohol, and continues so if kept in bottles or jars. When stored in casks, however, it acquires from the wood a pale amber tint, and in this state is sold as pale brandy. The dark color of brown brandy is produced artificially, to please the public taste, by means of a solution of caramel, and this is frequently added in excess to give a rich appearance to a brandy of low quality. A large proportion of the brandy sold in this country is simply raw grain spirits flavored and colored. The spirit is imported into France, where it is redistilled and converted into French brandy. Brandy improves in flavor by being kept, but loses in strength. Genuine Cognac brandy has always been both costly and difficult to obtain in this country (the more so on account of the high import tariff collected thereon), the price for the liquor reaching $20 or more per gallon. Of late years the development of viticulture in the western states, particularly in California, has enabled American enterprise to produce a brandy that is everywhere a formidable rival to the French article, and for purity and excellence infinitely preferable to the compounded and "doctored" spirit for which we have been accustomed to pay so high a price. Genuine brandy consists of alcohol and water, with small quantities of ænanthic ether, acetic ether, and other volatile bodies produced in the process of fermentation. The value of brandy as a medicine depends on the presence of these ethers and other volatile products; when, therefore, it is adulterated with raw grain spirit and water, the amount of these ethers is so reduced that the brandy becomes almost valueless for medical purposes. Imitation brandy is prepared either by flavoring highly-rectified spirit with essence of Cognac or by distilling the spirit with bruised prunes, acetic ether, argol, and a little genuine brandy, and adding to the distilled spirit tincture of catechu and spirit-coloring. This is said to be greatly improved by keeping. The strength of brandy as sold varies.

s.; BRESCHÉ.]

1. Literally:

(1) An attack, a military assault on a place.

"Thraise at the bak wall wes the brasche they gaue."—Sege Edinb. Castel. Poem, 16th cent., p. 292. (Jamieson.)

(2) A sudden illness. (Burns.)

2. Figuratively:

(1) An effort.

"The last brashe was made by a letter of the prime poet of our kingdome."—Muses Thren., Int., p. viii.
(Jamieson.)

(2) A transient fit of sickness.

"... but he hadna the saving gift, and he got two terms' rent in arrear. He got the first brash at Whitsunday put over wi' fair words and piping; . . ."—Scott: Red-gauntlet, let. xi.

† Possibly this use of the word may be from another root.

brāsh (2), s. [From brash (2), a. Cf. also Fr.
brèche=breach.]

Geology:

1. As an independent word: A provincial English word applied to the mass of broken and angular fragments lying above most rocks, and evidently produced by their disintegration. It is called also rubble.

"... but it [the alluvium] often passes downward into a mass of broken and angular fragments derived from the subjacent rock. To this mass the provincial name of "rubble" or "brash" is given in many parts of England, . . ."—Lyell: Man. of Geol. (ed. 1852), ch. vii.

2. In compos.: The word cornbrash is used for the upper division of the Lower Oolite, which consists of clays and calcareous sandstones passing downward into the forest marble. [CORNBRAH.]

brāsh'-ŷ (1), bra'ush-ie*, a. [From brash, s., and suffix -y.]

1. Stormy.

"We've brush'd the beat this monie a speat O' braushie weather."

Rev. J. Nicol. Poems, i. 114. (Jamieson.)

2. Delicate in constitution, subject to frequent ailments. (Scotch.)

brāsh'-ŷ (2), s. [BRASH (2), s.] Full of rubble, composed of rubble.

brā'-şī-ēr (1), brā'-zī-ēr, s. [Fr. brasier=a fire of live coals; Sp. braseiro; from Fr. braise=burning cinders; Prov. & Sp. brasa; Ital. bracia, brascia, bragia; O. Ger. bras=fire; Sw. brasa=live fire; O.
Scand. brasa=to solder. Cf. also Gael. brath=conflagration. (Littre.)] An open pan for burning wood or coal.

"It is thought they had no chimneys, but were warmed with coals on brasiers."—Arbuthnot.

brā'-şī-ēr (2), brā'-sī-ēre*, brā'-sŷ-ēre*, s.
[BRAZIER, 2.]

"Brasyere. Erarius."—Prompt. Parv.

bra'-şil, s. & a. [BRAZIL.]

bra'-şil-ēt-tō, s. [BRAZILETTO.]

bra'-şil-in, s. [BRAZILIN.]

brass, brasse*, bras*, breas*, bres*, s. & a.
[A. S. bræs (Somner); Lith. waras=brass (Mahn); O. Icel. bras=solder, especially that used in the working of iron (Wedgwood). From Icel. brasa=to harden by fire; brasa=to flame; Dan. brasa=to fry; possibly connected with Sansc. bhraj=to fry (Skeat). Cf. Wel. pres; Ir. pras; Gael. prais; Corn. brast, which, however, may be from the English.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) The compound metal, consisting of an alloy of copper and tin, described under II. 1.

†(2) Any article made of brass, a brass fitting.
(Generally in the plural.)

"The very scullion who cleans the brasses."—Hopkinson. (Goodrich & Porter.)

(3) A monumental brass. [II. 3.]

"If not by them on monumental brass,"

Thomson: Liberty, v.

(4) Money, both in Old English and in modern slang, on account of the use of the metal in the coinage. [TIN, COPPERS.]

"And bere here bras at thi bakke, to caleys to selle."

Piers Plow.: Vis., iii. 195.

2. Figuratively: Hardness, the typical quality of the metal. It is frequently in the Bible mentioned along with iron in a similar sense, as in the following cases—

(1) Strength for defense or attack.

"I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many people . . ."

—Micah iv. 13.

(2) Obstinacy in wickedness.

"They are all grievous revolters, walking with slanders:
they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters."—Jer.

vi. 28.

(3) Effrontery, impudence, shamelessness; incap-ability, like that of brass, either to yield or to change color in circumstances where an ordinary being composed of flesh and blood would do so.

"Because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass."—Isa. xlvi. 4.

"... his forehead of brass and his tongue of venom
. . ."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

II. Technically:

1. Metal: An alloy of copper and zinc.

(1) In ancient times: It is said that when the Roman consul Mummius, after capturing the celebrated Grecian city of Corinth, barbarously burnt the place to the ground, in B. C. 146, various metals, fused in the conflagration, became united into a compound or alloy, called from the circumstances now stated Corinthian brass. This is often supposed to have been the first discovery of brass itself, but Assyriologists consider it to have been mentioned in cuneiform inscriptions, both Chaldean and Assyrian.

(2) In modern times: Before zinc was obtained in its metallic form brass was manufactured from calamine (native carbonate of zinc) mixed with bōil, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, aş; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f.

-cian, -tian = şan. -tion, -sion = şūn; -tion, -şion = zhūn. -tious, -cious, -sious = şūs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bēl, dēl.

copper and charcoal. Even now this process is easier than the direct fusion together of the two metals. The proportion of copper and zinc vary. Ordinary brass is a yellow alloy of copper and twenty-eight to thirty-four per cent. of zinc. The density of cast brass is 7.8 to 8.4; that of brass wire 8.54. It is harder and yet more fusible than copper, more sonorous and a worse conductor of heat. It may be turned upon a lathe. It is extensively used for candlesticks, handles of doors, the framework of locks, mathematical instruments, &c., while in the state of wire it is much used in pin-making. [DUTCH GOLD.]

2. Scripture: The Heb. word for "brass" is nechhosheth, from nachhash=to shine. The metal thus designated evidently occurs in nature, for it is dug out of hills (Deut. viii. 9) and "molten out of the stone" (Deut. xxxiii. 25), which the artificial alloy, brass, never yet has been. In most parts of the Old Testament "brass" should be altered into "copper," though occasionally in the later books of the Old Testament it may be bronze. In the New Testament, in 1 Cor. xiii. 1, and Rev. ix. 20, the rendering is chalkos=(1) copper, (2) bronze; while in Rev. i. and ii. it is chalkolibanon, probably=frankincense of a deep color.

3. Arch. (pl): Monumental engravings on brass plates let into slabs in the pavements of ancient churches, representing the effigies, coats of arms, &c., of illustrious personages. (Gloss. of Arch.)

4. Mach.: A pillow, bearing, collar, box, or bush supporting a gudgeon. The name is applied from its being sometimes of brass, though in various instances it is of bronze.

5. Mining: Iron pyrites. The name, which is a misnomer, is given from the luster, which resembles that of brass.

B. As adjective: Consisting more or less of brass; brazen, resembling brass, in any way pertaining or relating to brass.

† Compounds of obvious signification: Brass-bound (Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. v.); brass-hoofed (Pope: Homer's Iliad, xi. 19); brass-paved (Spenser: F. Q., l. iv. 17); brass-studded (Longfellow: Courtship of Miles Standish, iv.); brass-throated (Longfellow: The Spanish Student, iii. 1); brass-visaged (Ben Jonson: Every Man out of his Humor).

Monumental Brass.

brass-band, s.

1. Literally:

(1) Gen.: A band of musicians performing upon instruments of brass.

(2) Spec.:

(a) The smaller variety of the military band, employed chiefly in cavalry regiments, on account of the greater ease with which brass instruments can be played on horseback. Those used are various: cornets, saxhorns, euphoniums, one or more bombardons, &c. (Grove.)

(b) One of the divisions of the "wind" of a full orchestra, consisting of trumpets, horns, trombones, and occasionally an ophicleide. [BAND.]

2. Figuratively. In political controversy, contemptuously: A party or a section of a party acting noisily in concert.

brass-foil, s. Very thin beaten sheet-brass, thinner than latten. It is called also Dutch gold.

brass-furnace, s. A furnace for fusing the metallic constituents of brass. These are melted in crucibles, the copper being first melted, and the zinc then added piecemeal, as it is vaporized by an excess of heat. The molding-trough is on one side of the pouring or spill-trough, and the furnace is on the other. There is a core-oven, heated by the furnace, and serving to dry the cores for the faucets or other hollow articles which are cast.

brass-powder, s. A powder made of brass, or anything resembling it. Two kinds are made.

1. Red-colored: Ground copper filings or precipitated powder of copper with red ochre.

2. Gold-colored: Gold-colored brass or Dutch leaf reduced to powder.

† They are mixed with pale varnish, or else they can be applied by dusting over a surface which has been previously covered with varnish.

brass-rule, s.

Printing: Brass strips, type-high, used by printers for cutting into lengths to separate advertisements and columns; also for page-rules and table-work (technically known as rule and figure work).

brass, v. t. [From brass, s. (q. v.)]

Metallurgy: To give a brass coat to copper.

brā's-sage, s. [O. Fr. brassage.] A fine formerly used to defray the expense of coinage.

brā's-sart (pl. brassarts), s. [Fr. brassard.] [BRACER.] Plate armor for defense of the arm, reaching from the shoulder to the elbow.

brā's-sāte, s. [From Eng. brass(ic); -ate.] A salt of brassic acid (q. v.).

brāsse, s. [A transposition of barse. Cf. L. Ger. brasse; H. Ger. brassen=the bream. (Mahn.)] [BREAM.]

Ichthy.: A kind of perch, Lucioperca.

brassed, pa. par. & a. [BRASS, v.]

brās'-sēl-lŷ, s. & a. [Derived from Eng. bachelor.]

brasselly-buttons, s. [Derived from bachelor's buttons (Lychnis diurna).] (Sibthorp.)

brās'-seş, s. pl. [BRASS.]

brā's-sēt, s. [Etym. doubtful.] A casque or head-piece of armor.

brā's-si-ā, s. [Named after Mr. Brass, a gardener who collected seeds and plants in Africa for Kew Garden.]

Bot.: A genus of Orchids, consisting of four species growing on trees. The flowers are large, and colored pale-yellow, with brown spots.

brās'-sīc, a. [From Lat. brassica (q. v.), and Eng. suff. -ic.]

brassic acid, s. Brassic acid or erucic acid, $C_{22}H_{42}O_2$. An acid extracted from colza oil by saponification. It is solid at ordinary temperatures, but melts between 30° and 32° C. It crystallizes from an alcoholic solution in beautiful long needles. Brassic acid occurs also in the oil of white mustard and of rape.

brā's-sī-çā, s. [Lat. brassica; Celt. bresic=a cabbage.]

Bot.: A genus of cruciferous plants containing several well-known culinary herbs. There are numerous well-known species, among which as the most familiar may be mentioned Brassica oleracea (Sea Cabbage), the original of the cabbage of our gardens [CABBAGE]; B. monensis, the Wall-flower Cabbage; and the B. campestris, or Common Wild Nave. The B. napus, the Rape or Cole-seed, and the B. rapa, or Common Turnip, have here and there rooted themselves spontaneously, thus producing in many a belief that they are indigenous in localities in which they did not originally exist. The colza of the Dutch is B. campestris; B. præcox is the Summer Rape of the Germans; and B. elongata is cultivated in Hungary for its oil. The various cultivated species, as a rule, require a loamy soil, well manured, and with plenty of water. [BRASSICACEÆ, BRASSICIDÆ.]

"They adorned him [the poet laureate] with a new and elegant garland, composed of vine-leaves, laurel, and brassica, a sort of cabbage!"—Pope: Of the Poet Laureate.

brās-sīc-ā-cē-æ, s. pl. [From Lat. brassica, and fem. pl. adjectival suffix -aceæ.]

Bot.: An order of plants more generally called Cruciferae (Crucifers). It is placed by Lindley under his Cistal Alliance. The sepals are four, the petals four, cruciate; the stamens six, two shorter than the other four. Ovary superior, with parietal placentæ. Fruit, a silique or silicle one-celled or spuriously two-celled, seeds many or one. It constitutes Linnæus' order Tetradynamia. Lindley divides the order into five sections—Pleurorhizæ, Notorhizæ, Orthoplocæ, and Diplocolobæ. The Brassicaceæ or Crucifers are one of the most important orders in the whole vegetable kingdom. About 1,730 species are known. Their chief seat is in the temperate zones. Among the well-known plants ranked under the order may be mentioned the wall-flower, the stock, the water-cress and other cresses, the cabbage, the turnip, &c.

brās-sīc'-ī-dæ, s. pl. [From Lat. brassica (q. v.).] A family of cruciferous plants of the sub-order or section Orthoplocæ. Type, Brassica (q. v.).

brās'-sī-dæ, s. pl. [From Mod. Lat. brassia (q. v.).] A family of Orchids. Typical genus, Brassia (q. v.).

†brass'-ī-nēss, s. [Eng. brassy; -ness.] The quality of being brassy.

brass'-īng, pr. par. & s. [BRASS, v.]

Metallurgy: The art of giving a brass coat to copper.

brass'-smīth, brass'-smīth, s. [Eng. brass; smith.] A smith working in brass.

"Has he not seen the Scottish brassmith's Idea . . ."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. iv.

brass'-vis-aged, a. Brazen; bold-faced.

brass'-work, s. [Eng. brass; work.] Work in brass.

" . . . old oak carvings, brasswork, clocks and candelabra, chairs," &c.—Times, Sept. 9, 1876. (Advt.)

†brass'-ŷ, a. [Eng. brass; -y.]

1. Lit.: Resembling brass.

"The part in which they lie is near black, with some sparks of a brassy pyrites in it."—Woodward.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Hard as brass; unfeeling.

"Losses,
Enow to press a royal merchant down,
And pluck commiseration of his state
From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint."
Shakesp.: Mer. of Venice, iv. 1.

(2) Impudent.

brāst, *braste, *brasten, *brastyn, v. [BURST, v.] To burst. (Prompt. Parv.)

"But with that piercing noise flew open quite or brast."
Spenser: F. Q., l. viii. 4.

"Mycht nane behald his face,
The fyrie sparkis brasting from his ene."
Doug.: Virgil, 399, 44.

brāst, pa. par. & a. [BURST, pa. par.]

"Mid wounds, and clinging darts, and lances brast,
And foes disabled in the brutal fray."
Byron: Childe Harold, i. 78.

brastle, v. i. [A. S. brastlian, barstlian; M. H. Ger. brasteln=to crack, crackle.] To crack, to make a crackling noise, to be broken.

"Sceldes brastleden, helmes tohelden."—Layamon, iii. 94.

brāt (1), *bratt, s. [Wel. brat=a rag, pinafore; Gael. brat; Ir. brat=a mantle, cloak.]

1. A cloak, mantle.

"Ne had they but a shete
Which that they might wrappen hem in a-night,
And a bratt to walken in by daylight."
Chaucer: C. T., 16, 347.

2. An apron, pinafore. (Provinc. & Scotch.)

"To mak them brats, then ye maun toil and spin, Ae wean fa's sick, ane scads itsell wi' broe."
Allan Ramsay: Gent. Shepherd.

3. Clothing generally. (This seems merely to be an oblique sense of the same word, as used to denote an apron which covers the rest of one's clothes.) (Scotch.)

"He ordinarily uses this phrase as a proverb, that he desires no more in the world, but a bit and a brat; that is, only as much food and raiment as nature craves."—Scottish Presb. Elog., p. 36.

"God bless your Honors a' your days, Wi' sowps o' kail and brats o' claise."
Burns: Earnest Cry and Prayer.

4. Scum. It does not necessarily signify refuse; but is also applied to the cream which rises from milk, especially of what is called a sour cogue, or the floatings of boiled whey.

"Brat, a cover or scurf."—Statist. Acc., xv. 8, N.

† The bit and the brat: Food and raiment. (Scotch.) brāt (2), s. [Etym. doubtful. Said by some to be the same as brat (1), but probably the same as brood.]

I. Literally:

1. A child, originally not used contemptuously.

"O Israel! O household of the Lord!
O Abraham's brats! O brood of blessed seed!
O chosen sheep that loved the Lord indeed!"
Gascoigne: De Profundis.

"I shall live to see the invisible lady, to whom I was obliged, and whom I never beheld since she was a brat in hanging sleeves."—Swift.

2. A child, said contemptuously.

"This brat is none of mine;
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire."
Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, ii. 3.

"I give command to kill or save,
Can grant ten thousand pounds a year,
And make a beggar's brat a peer."—Swift.

3. The young of any animal; offspring.

"Jupiter summoned all the birds and beasts before him, with their brats and little ones, to see which of them had the prettiest children."—L'Estrange.

II. Figuratively: Offspring, produce.

"The two late conspiracies were the brats and offspring of two contrary factions."—South.

brāt (3), s. [Etymol. doubtful. Possibly a shortened form of brattice.]

In Coal-mining: A thin stratum of a coarse mixture of coal and carbonate of lime or pyrites, frequently found lying at the roof of a seam of coal.

brātch'-art, s. [The same as BRACHELL (q. v.), or formed direct from Fr. brache=a hound.] A whelp; the young of an animal.

"That bratchart in a busse was born;
They fand a monster on the morn,
War faced than a cat."
Montgomerie: Watson's Coll., iii. 12.

"Brathly thai this werk bigan."—Cursor Mundi, 2240.

brät'-täch, s. [Gael. bratach, bruttach.] A banner, a flag, an ensign, colors.

"It is natural I should like the Ruthvens, the Lindsays, the Ogilvys, the Oliphants, and so many others of our brave and noble neighbors, who are sheathed in steel of my making, like so many Paladins, better than those naked, snatching mountaineers, who are ever doing us wrong, especially since no five of each clan have a rusty shirt of mail as old as their brattach."—Scott: Fair Maid of Perth, ch. vi.

brät'-tice, s. [O. Eng. bretage, bretasce, brutasce, &c.; O. Fr. bretesche=a wooden outwork.] [BUTRESS, BRET-TICE, BRET-ASCE.]

Mining: A planking on the inside of a mine shaft or gallery.

"As everybody knows by this time, the workings of the Hartley Mine were reached by a single shaft, the diameter of which was 12 ft. For purposes of ventilation this was divided into two equal parts by a wooden partition, called in mining language a brattice, which ran down it from top to bottom."—London Times, Jan. 28, 1862.

Brattice.

brät'-ticing, s. [BRATTICE, s.]

1. The act or operation of putting up brattices.
2. Brattice-work, brattices.

"A telegraphic message, sent last night to The Times, stated that a fall in the shaft on Saturday night had prevented the sinkers going on with the removal of the ruins of the bratticing."—London Times, Jan. 21, 1862.

brät'-tish-ing, s. [BRATTICE, s.] Brattice work; a crest of open carved work on the top of a shrine.

*brät'-tle, *brat'-tyl, v. i. [Probably onomatopoeic: as rattle (q. v.), but compare brattle above.]

"Branchis brattlyng, and blaknyt schew the brayis With hirstis harsk of waggand wyndil strayis."—Doug.: Virgil, 202, 28.

2. To advance rapidly, making a noise with the feet.

"Daft lassie, when we're naked, what'll ye say, Giff our twa herds come brattling down the brae, And see us sae?"—Ramsay: Poems, ii. 75.

brät'-tle, *brät'-tyl, s. [BRATTLE, v.]

1. A clattering noise, as that made by the feet of horses when prancing, or moving rapidly. (Rudd.)

"Now by the time that they a piece had ta'en, All in a brattle to the gate are gane."—Ross: Helenore, p. 96.

"Thou need na start awa sae hasty, Wi' bickering brattle."—Burns: To a Mouse.

2. Hurry; rapid motion of any kind.

"Bauld Bess flew till him wi' a brattle, And spite of his teeth held him Close by the craig."—Ramsay: Poems, i. 261.

3. A short race.

"The sma' droop-rumol't, hunter cattle, Might aiblins waur't thee for a brattle; But sax Scotch miles thou try't their mettle, An' gar't them whaizle."—Burns: Auld Farmer's Salutation.

4. Fury; violent attack.

"Or silly sheep, wha bide this brattle O' winter war, And through the drift, deep-lairing sprattle, Beneath a scaur."—Burns: Winter Night.

brätt'-lång, pa. par. & a. [BRATTLE, v.] Noisy; creating a noise.

"A brattlin band unhappily Drave by him wi' a binner, And heels-o'er-goudie coupit he."—Christmas Ba'ing, Skinner's Misc. Poet., p. 127.

*bräu'-i-tie, s. [Fr. braverie.] [BRAVITY.]

1. A show, a pageant.

"All curious pastimes and consaits Cud be imaginat be man, Wes to be sene on Edinburgh gaits, Fra time that brauttie began."—Burel: Entry Q. Anne, Watson's Coll., ii. 5.

2. Finery in dress or appearance.

"Syne she beheld ane heuinly sicht, Of Nymphs who supit nectar cauld; Whois bravities can scarce be tauld."—Burel: Entry Q. Anne, Watson's Coll., ii. 7.

*brâul, *brâwl, s. [O. Fr. bransle=a totter, swing, shake, shocke . . . also a brawle or daunce.] (Cotgrave.) BRANGILL, s.] A kind of dance.

"It was ane celest recreation to behold ther lycht lopene, galmondng, stendling bakuart and forduart, dansand base dansis, pauuans, galyardis, turdions, braulis and branglis, buffons, vitht mony vthir lycht dansis, the quihik are ouer prolit to be reherst."—Compl. S., p. 102.

*braunched, a. [BRANCH, s.]

"Braunched as a tree, branchu."—Palsgrave.

*braunchi, *braunchy, a. [BRANCHY.]

*braun-dise, v. i. [BRANDISH, v.] To fling or prance about (as a horse).

"That hee nas loose in no lime ludes to greene, To byte ne to braundise ne to break no woves."—Alisaunder (ed. Skeat), 1121-22.

brâ'un-ite, s. [From Mr. Braun, of Gotha. (Dana.)]

Min.: A native sesquioxide of manganese, Mn₂O₃. It is crystallized or massive, in the former case tetragonal. Hardness, 6-6.5; sp. gr., 4.75-4.82; luster, sub-metallic color, and streak dark brownish black. Composition: Protoxide of manganese, 86.95; oxygen, 8.08-9.85; baryta, 0.24-2.25; silica, a trace, 8.63; and water, 0.95-1.00.

*braush-ie, a. [BRASHY, a.] Stormy.

brä-vä-dō, brä-va-dō, *brä-vade', s. [Sp. & Ital. bravata; Fr. bravade.] [BRAVE.] An insolent menace; defiance; boastful behavior.

"The steward departed without replying to this bravade, otherwise than by a dark look of scorn."—Scott: Abbot, ch. xxxi.

"The English were impatient to fall on. But their general had made up his mind, and was not to be moved by the bravadoes of the enemy or by the murmurs of his own soldiers."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

bräve (Eng.), bräve, bräw, brâ (Scotch), a. [Fr. brave=brave, fine, gay; compare Gael. breagh=fine.]

1. Daring, courageous, high-spirited, fearless.

"None but the brave deserve the fair."—Dryden: Alexander's Feast, l. 15.

"Rest with the brave, whose names belong To the high sanctity of song!"—Hemans: Wallace's Invocation to Bruce.

2. Gallant, noble.

"I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two, And wear my dagger with a braver grace."—Shakesp.: Mer. of Ven., iii. 4.

"And where full many a brave tree stood, That used to spread its boughs and ring."—Wordsworth: White Doe of Rylstone, vii.

3. Showy, grand, gaudy, gay.

"Rings put upon his fingers, And brave attendants near him when he wakes; Would not the beggar then forget himself?"—Shakesp.: Tam. of the Shrew, Induct., i.

"Nearer and nearer as they bear, Spears, pikes, and axes flash in air. Now might you see the Tartans brave, And plaids and plumage dance and wave."—Scott: Lady of the Lake, ii. 16.

4. Excellent, fine. (It appears to be used simply to express excellence or pre-eminence in any point or quality in men or things.)

"Cel. O, that's a brave man, he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover, as a puisny tilter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose; but all's brave that youth mounts, and folly guides. Who comes here?"—Shakesp.: As You Like It, iii. 4.

5. Handsome.

"Ason was born to him called Absalom, who was the bravest man perhaps in the world; he was a man of the greatest perfection from the crown of his head unto the sole of his foot."—Dickson: Sermons, p. 109.

6. Pleasant, agreeable.

"O Peggy, dinna say me na; Bu' grant to me the treasure Of love's return; 'tis nka bra', When ilka thing yields pleasure."—A. Nicol: Poems, 1739, p. 27.

"It being a brave day I walked to Whitehall."—Pepys: Diary.

"A fine evening, sir," was Edward's salutation; "Ow, ay, sir, 'ee bra' night," replied the lieutenant, in broad Scotch of the most vulgar description."—Scott: Waverley, ch. xxxix.

7. Stout, able-bodied.

"Five bonnie lasses round their table, And seven brave fellows, stout an' able,"—Burns: A Dedication to Gavin Hamilton.

¶ A word which came originally from the Romance languages, entering English in the 16th century, while the corresponding term in German, brav, entered that language in the 17th century. (From the Select Glossary, p. 24.)

bräve, s. [BRAVE, a.]

1. A brave person, a chief. (Used especially among our Indians.)

"Came to parley with Standish, and offer him furs as a present; Friendship was in their looks, but in their hearts there was hatred. Braves of the tribe were these, and brothers gigantic in stature."—Longfellow: Miles Standish, vii.

- *2. A hectoring, bullying fellow.

"Hot braves like thee may fight, but know not well To manage this, the last great stake."—Dryden.

- *3. A boast, brag, challenge, defiance.

"And so in this to bear me down with braves, 'Tis not the difference of a year or two."—Shakesp.: Tit. And. ii. 1.

- *4. Bravado.

"To call my lord mayor knave: Besides, too, in a brave."—Watts: Recreation, 1654.

bräve, v. t. & i. [BRAVE, a.]

A. Transitive:

1. To defy, challenge, dare, set at defiance.

(1) Of persons.
"Sure I shall see yon heaps of Trojans kill'd, Rise from the shades, and brave me on the field."—Pope: Homer's Iliad, bk. xxi., l. 64, 65.

- (2) Of things personified.

"Where braving angry winter's storms, The lofty Ochils rise."—Burns: Where Braving Angry Winter's Storms.

"But no man had in larger measure that evil courage which braves and even courts disgust and hatred."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xi.

- *2. To risk, venture on.

"In braving arms against thy sovereign."—Shakesp.: King Richard II., ii. 3.

- (1) To present a boastful show of.

"Both particular persons and factions are apt enough to flatter themselves, or, at least, to brave that which they believe not."—Bacon.

- (2) To make fine or showy, to adorn, set off.

"Gru. Face not me: thou hast braved many men; brave not me; I will neither be faced nor braved. I say unto thee, I bid thy master cut out the gown, but I did not bid him cut it to pieces. Ergo, thou liest."—Shakesp.: Tam. of the Shrew, iv. 3.

- (3) To give courage to, encourage.

B. Intransitive: To swagger about, show off.

"As at Troy most dastards of the Greeks Did brave about the corpses of Hector colde."—Spenser: Ruines of Rome.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between the verbs to brave, to defy, to dare, and to challenge: "We brave things; we dare and challenge persons; we defy persons or their actions: the sailor braves the tempestuous ocean, and very often braves death itself in its most terrific form; he dares the enemy whom he meets to the engagement; he defies all his boastings and vain threats. . . . Brave and defy are dispositions of mind which display themselves in the conduct; dare and challenge are modes of action; we brave a storm by meeting its violence, and bearing it down with superior force; we defy the malice of our enemies by pursuing that line of conduct which is most calculated to increase its bitterness. To brave conveys the idea of a direct and personal application of force to force; defying is carried on by a more indirect and circuitous mode of procedure: men brave the dangers which threaten them with evil; they defy the angry will which is set up to do them harm. To dare and challenge are both direct and personal; but the former consists either of actions, words, or looks; the latter of words only. . . . Daring arises from our contempt of others; challenging arises from a high opinion of ourselves; the former is mostly accompanied with unbecoming expressions of disrespect as well as aggravation; the latter is mostly divested of all angry personality. . . . We dare only to acts of violence; we challenge to any kind of contest in which the skill or the power of the parties are to be tried." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

brāved, pa. par. & a. [BRAVE, v.]

brāve-ly, adv. [Eng. brave; -ly.]

1. In a good sense: In a brave manner; courageously, valiantly, nobly.

"Record it with your high and worthy deeds;

"Twas bravely done, if you bethink you of it."

Shakesp.: Much Ado about Nothing, v. 1.

"Gone they are, bravely, though misled,

With a dear father at their head!"

Wordsworth: White Doe of Rylstone, o. 2.

2. In a bad sense:

*(1) Ostentatiously, defiantly.

" . . . broke forth in a courageous couplet or two upon Sir Richard Blackmore: he has printed it with his name to it, and bravely assigns no other reason, than that the said Sir Richard has abused Dr. Swift."—Pope: Letter to Jervas (1716).

*(2) Gaudily, finely, gaily.

"And she . . . decked herself bravely to allure the eyes of all men that should see her."—Judith x. 4.

brāve-ness, s. [Eng. brave; -ness.] The quality of being brave; bravery.

brā-v-ēr-ly, brā-v-ēr-lye, s. [Eng. brave; -ry. Fr. braverie.]

I. Literally:

1. In a good sense: The quality of being brave; courage, valor, high spirit, fearlessness.

"Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,

Adds softest love, and more than female sweetness."

Addison.

"Remember, sir, my liege,

The natural bravery of your isle."

Shakespeare.

2. In a bad sense:

*(1) The act of braving, bravado; false assumption of real bravery.

"In which time one Tait, a follower of Cesford, who as then was of the Lord's party, came forth in a bravery, and called to the opposite horsemen, asking if any of them had courage to break a lance for his mistress; . . ."—Spotswood, p. 287.

"Some of his soldiers, however, who observed him closely, whispered that all his bravery was put on."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xviii.

*(2) Showiness, gaudiness, splendor.

"If he [the good yeoman] chance to appear in clothes above his rank, it is to grace some great man with his service, and then he blusheth at his own bravery."—Fuller: Holy State, bk. ii., ch. 18.

" . . . there the Ionians, with their wives and children, and all their bravery, congregated periodically from their different cities to glorify him."—Grote: Hist. of Greece (1846), vol. i., pt. i., ch. i., p. 62.

*(3) Ostentation, show.

"I'll court his favors:

But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me

Into a towering passion." Shakesp.: Hamlet, v. 2.

"Let princes choose ministers more sensible of duty than of rising, and such as love business rather upon conscience than upon bravery."—Bacon.

*(4) Fine dress.

" . . . my estate, I wot not how, hath of late been somewhat insufficient to maintain the expense of those braveries, wherewith it is incumbent on us, who are chosen and selected spirits, to distinguish ourselves from the vulgar."—Scott: Monastery, ch. xvi.

*(5) A showy person.

"A man that is the bravery of his age."—Beaumont & Fletcher.

II. Fig.: Applied to fine diction or ornate language.

"In the present cause, we must not be pleased or put off with the buskry or bravery of language. Clothed and adorned with the busk and bravery of beautiful and big words."—M'Ward: Contendings, pp. 324, 356.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between bravery, courage, and valor: "Bravery lies in the blood; courage lies in the mind: the latter depends on the reason; the former on the physical temperament: the first is a species of instinct; the second is a virtue: a man is brave in proportion as he is without thought; he has courage in proportion as he reasons or reflects. Bravery seems to be something involuntary, a mechanical movement that does not depend upon one's self; courage requires conviction, and gathers strength by delay; it is a noble and lofty sentiment; the force of example, the charms of music, the fury and tumult of battle, the desperation of the conflict, will make cowards brave; the courageous man wants no other incentives than what his own mind suggests. . . . It is as possible for a man to have courage without bravery as to have bravery without courage: Cicero betrayed his want of bravery when he sought to shelter himself against the attacks of Cataline; he displayed his courage when he laid open the treasonable purposes of this conspirator to the whole senate, and charged him to his face with the crimes of which he knew him to be guilty. Valor is a higher quality than either bravery or courage, and seems to partake of the grand characteristics of both; it combines the fire of bravery with the determination and firmness of courage: bravery is most fitted for the soldier and all who receive orders; courage is most adapted for the general and all who give commands; valor for the leader and framer of enterprises, and all who carry great projects into execution: bravery requires to be guided; courage is equally fitted to command or obey; valor directs and executes. Bravery has most relation to danger; courage and valor include in them a particular reference to action: the brave man exposes himself; the courageous man advances to the scene of action which is before him; the valiant man seeks for occasions to act. The three hundred Spartans who defended Thermopylæ were brave. Socrates drinking the hemlock, Regulus returning to Carthage, Titus tearing himself from the arms of the weeping Berenice, Alfred the Great going into the camp of the Danes, were courageous. Hercules destroying monsters, Perseus delivering Andromeda, Achilles running to the ramparts of Troy, and the knights of more modern date who have gone in quest of extraordinary adventures, are all entitled to the peculiar appellation of valiant." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

brāv-īng, pr. par., a. & s. [BRAVE, v.]

†A. & B. As pr. par. & participial adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"Barbarossa sent a braving letter to Saladin, . . ."—

Fuller: Holy War, bk. v., ch. 13.

"The Florentines and Senoys are by the ears;

Have fought with equal fortune, and continue

A braving war."

Shakesp.: All's Well that Ends Well, i. 2.

C. As substantive: Bravado, boast, show.

"With so proud a strain of threats and bravings."

Chapman.

brāv-īng-ly, adv. [Eng. braving, a.; -ly.] In a braving manner; defiantly.

"Bravingly, in your epistle to Sir Edward Hobby, you end thus."—Sheldon: Miracles of Antichrist, p. 49.

brāv-ī-t-ly, brāv-ī-t-lye, s. [Old Fr. braveté.]

1. In a good sense: Courage; bravery.

"Let us put on courage in thir sad times; brave times for the chosen soldiers of Jesus Christ to shew their courage into; offering brave opportunities for shewing forth the bravity of spirit in suffering."—Ja. Welwood's Letter, Walker's Remark, Pass., p. 23.

2. In a bad sense: An outward show; pomp.

bra'-vō (1), s. [Ital. bravo.] A bandit, an outlaw, an assassin.

"For boldness like the bravoes and banditti, is seldom employed, but upon desperate services."—Government of the Tongue.

"The bravo was sent to the Tower."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vi.

¶ At first, while as yet not naturalized, it had the plural bravi. The bravi at first were men whose fierce instincts and the inadequacy of the civil laws led them to avenge wrong, real or imaginary, without recourse to legal process. Gradually a community of sentiment induced fraternity, and they became an oath-bound organization, which, even down to the present day, exists in Sicily, Calabria, and the wilder parts of Italy. The different ramifications of the bravi flourished under various names and were transplanted to foreign soils with Italian emigrants—a melancholy proof of which was afforded by the killing of Chief of Police Hennessey, and the subsequent massacre of the suspects of this crime in the city jail in New Orleans, La., a few years ago, the branch of the organization to which it was claimed the assassins belonged being called "The Mafia." The bravi have often been the subject of literary composition in both the Old World and the New, and their praises have been sung and they have likewise been denounced under various names. They are at one time characterized as the product of the mala vita of Italy, and at another, they are commended as highly as John Hampden, for their courage in resisting what they think wrong.

"Hired fencers, called bravi. . . ."—Morison: Itinerary, pt. 2, p. 25. (Trench: On some Def. in our Eng. Dict., p. 29.)

Nares has the plural bravoes.

bra'-vō (2), s. [BRAVO, interj.] A cheer, a hurrah.

bra'-vō, interj. [Ital. bravo (m.), brava (f.)=brave.] Excellently! well or bravely done!

Music: Well or bravely done. An exclamation of applause, which from Italy, its native land, has made way into this country, and has become thoroughly naturalized. For a female performer literary accuracy requires that it should be brava, and for more than one performer bravi.

bra-vū'-rā, s. & a. [Ital. bravura; Fr. bravoure=spirit, bravery.]

A. As substantive:

1. Lit. In music: An air requiring great skill and spirit in its execution, each syllable being divided into several notes. It is distinguished from a simple melody by the introduction of florid passages. (Stainer & Barrett.) A style of both music and execution designed to task the abilities of the artist. (Grove.)

"The duet in which Mary obtains the King's promise to befriend Clifford contains a bravura for Miss Pyne which is very pleasing, . . ."—London Sat. Review Dec. 14, 1861.

2. Fig.: A lively display.

" . . . and you, I, and a few others, who have witnessed his [Coleridge's] grand bravuras of display, were to have the usual fortune of ghost-seers, . . ."—De Quincey: Works (ed. 1863), vol. ii., p. 50.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to or connected with the execution of a bravura.

"His bravura powers are of the most surprising sort, and as a concerto player he has an aplomb and fire almost phenomenal."—Cornhill Mag., Jan., 1867, p. 35.

brāw, brā', a. [BRAVE, a.] braw-warld, a. (Scotch.) Showy, gaudy.

brăx-ý, brăx-êş, brăx-it, brăcks, s. & a. [Possibly contracted from A. S. bræceócnas=the "breaking" sickness, the falling sickness, epilepsy; from bræc=broke, past tense of brecan=to break; Gael. bragsaidh=braxy. Cf. also A. S. broc=disease, affliction, misery; and Gael. brec=small-pox.]

A. As substantive:

1. A disease in sheep. This term is frequently applied to totally different disorders, but the true braxy is undoubtedly an intestinal affection, attended with diarrhoea and retention of the urine. After some young sheep have been weaned, they are apt to gorge themselves with grass, turnips, &c.; this produces a kind of colic, which usually ends in death. Again, when a lean flock of sheep is placed suddenly on rich food, or on coarse pasture of an indigestible nature, irritation and inflammation of the bowels set in, and this frequently proves fatal. In both cases the sheep are said to die of braxy. The duration of the disease is very short, in some cases terminating fatally in twenty-four hours.

¶ Dumb braxy: The dysentery in sheep.

"The dumb braxy . . . is distinguished from sickness by the season of the year in which it appears and by dysentery in the common form of a bloody flux."—Ess. Highl. Soc., iii: 416. (Jamieson.)

2. A sheep which has died of braxy.

"While Highlandmen hate tolls and taxes;
While moorlan' herds like guid fat braxies."

Burns: Epistle to William Simpson.

3. The mutton of such a sheep.

B. As adjective: Of or belonging to a sheep which has died of braxy.

¶ Braxy-mutton: The flesh of a sheep which has died of braxy. As the duration of the disease is very short, it may be assumed that the structures of the body have not been affected by it, and that the disease has been limited to the intestines. Every part of the sheep therefore may be eaten, except the liver, the kidneys, and the intestines.

brāze, v. t. [From brass, s. In Fr. braser.]

1. Literally:

(1) To fix or solder in with an alloy of brass and zinc.

"If the nut be not to be cast in brass, but only hath a worm brazed into it, this niceness is not so absolutely necessary, because that worm is first turned up, and bowed into the grooves of the spindle; and you may try that before it is brazed in the nut."—Moxon.

(2) To cover or ornament with brass.

"Full on the lance a stroke so justly sped,
That the broad falchion lopp'd its brazer head."

Pope: Homer's Iliad, xvi. 144-5.

2. Fig. To harden, to be hardened.

"I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it."—Shakesp.: King Lear, i. 1.

"If damned custom hath not braz'd it so,
That it is proof and bulwark against sense."

Shakesp.: Hamlet, iii. 4.

brā'-zen, brā'-sen, a. [A. S. bræsen, bræsen= (1) brazen, made of brass, (2) strong, powerful. (Bosworth.)]

1. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit. Made in whole or in part of brass.

"... inscribed on brazen tablets..."—Lewis: Ear. Rom. Hist. (1855), ch. v., § 7, vol. i., p. 147.

2. Fig. (chiefly in poetry):

(1) Of an instrument resounding like brass: Loud, making noisy clangor.

"With loud and dissonant clangor Echoed the sound of their brazen drum from ceiling and casement." Longfellow: Evangeline, i. 4.

(2) Of the larynx or "throat" in a domineering man: No more feeling than a trumpet would do the nature or effect of the sounds which it sends forth. (Contemptuously.)

"I mourn the pride

And avarice that makes man a wolf to man:

Hear the faint echo of those brazen throats,

By which he speaks the language of his heart."

Cowper: The Task, bk. iv.

(3) Of the sounds sent forth by an instrument of brass: Loud, boisterous.

"Trumpeters,

With brazen din blast you the city's ear;

Make mingle with your rattling tabourines."

Shakesp.: Ant. and Cleop., iv. 8.

(4) Of the forehead: As unabashed as if made of brass; possessed of effrontery, impudent, immodest.

"Talbot continued to frequent the court, appeared daily with brazen front before the princess whose ruin he had plotted..."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vi.

¶ The real adjective brazen is now more rarely used than it once was. It is being gradually displaced by the substantive brass used adjectively. The same process is at work with golden, beechen, &c.

II. Scripture & Theology: In the earlier part of the Old Testament, brazen, in the authorized version, means made of copper; in some of the later parts it may mean made of bronze. Nowhere, apparently, in the Old Testament does it signify made of what we now call "brass." [BRASS.] Connected with the Jewish tabernacle and the worship there offered there were "brases" (or copper) vessels and utensils, as "brases" censers (Num. xvi. 39), pots (Lev. vi. 28), a "grate of network" (Exod. xxvii. 4, xxxv. 16, xxxviii. 4), rings (ibid. xxvii. 4), a laver (ibid. xxx. 18). (See also brazen-altar, brasesea, and brases-serpent.)

¶ (1) Brazen age.

Myth. The third of the four ages into which history was fancifully divided, each marking a new stage in the progress of degeneracy [AGE.]

(2) Brazen altar, brases altar.

Jewish worship: (a) Connected with the tabernacle: An altar of "shittim wood," overlaid with plates of brass (copper?).

(b) Connected with the temple: An altar of burnt-offering, all of brass (bronze or copper?).

(3) Brazen dish.

Mining: The standard after which other "dishes" are constructed. Its dimensions are 28'x4'x6', and it serves as a gauge for all other ore measures, which are called "dishes" by miners.

(4) Brases sea.

Jewish worship: A large reservoir or tank of "brass" (bronze or copper?), connected with Solomon's temple, containing at the lowest estimate about 16,000 gallons. (1 Kings, vii. 26; 2 Chron. iv. 5.)

(5) Brases serpent.

Jewish History and Theology: A serpent of "brass" (copper?), placed upon a pole and elevated in the sight of the Jewish people in the wilderness, that those bitten by fiery serpents looking at it in faith might be cured. (Num. xxi. 9.) Jesus draws a parallel between the lifting up of the serpent (upon a pole) and His own lifting up (upon the cross), as the object of faith for the attainment of eternal life. (John iii. 14, 15.)

brazen-browed, a. Having a forehead as incapable of blushing as if it were composed of brass; shameless, impudent.

"Noon day vices, and brazen-browed iniquities."

"Well said, brazen-face! hold it out."

Shakesp.: Merry Wives, iv. 2.

brazen-faced, a. As incapable of feeling abashed, or blushing as if the face were of brass.

"What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me!"—Shakesp.: Lear, ii. 2.

brazen-headed, a. Having a head or top literally of brass.

"O'erthwarted with the brazen-headed spear."

Tennyson: Enone.

brazen-imaged, a. Resembling a brazen image in being manufactured by man.

"She-wolf! whose brazen-imaged dugs impart

The milk of conquest yet within the dome."

Byron: Child Harold, iv. 88.

brā'-zen, v. t. [From brazen, a. (q. v.).] Impudently to maintain. (Generally followed by it out, the matter out, or some such expression.)

"When I reprimanded him for his tricks, he would talk saucily, lye, and brazen it out."—Arbuthnot.

†brā'-zen-ly, adv. [Eng. brazen; -ly.] In a brazen manner; shamelessly, impudently.

two most prominent being Admirals Mello and Da Gama. This country was forced to take part in the fighting, in order to protect American interests, Commodore Benham firing on the insurgent fleet. Brazil is situated in the great eastern angle of South America, between lat. 4° 30' N. and 33° 40' S., and long. 34° 49' and 72° W., and contains an area of about 3,275,326 square miles, and a population of about 15,000,000.

B. As adj.: Of or belonging to the country described under A.

Brazil-nuts, s. pl.

Bot., Comm., &c.: The seeds of a Brazilian tree—the Bertholletia excelsa. It belongs to the order Lecythidaceæ. The “nuts” or seeds are largely exported from Para, whence they are sometimes called Para-nuts. They are edible, besides which they yield on pressure an oil used by watchmakers and artists.

Brazil-tea, s.

Bot., Comm., &c.: A tree—the Mate (Plex Paraguyensis), the leaves of which are used in South America as a substitute for Chinese or Indian tea.

Brazil-wood, s.

Bot., Comm., &c.: A name often given to the dye-wood brasil (1), which occurs in the country of Brazil, though it is not from it that the name was originally derived. [BRAZIL (1), etym., def., &c.]

brăz-îl-ët-tō, s. [In Fr. brésillette; Port. brasil-ete; dimin. of brasil (q. v.).

Bot.: An English name of Cæsalpinia, a genus of leguminous plants constituting the typical one of the sub-order Cæsalpinieæ. The Narrow-leaved Braziletto, C. sappan, furnishes the sappan-wood used in dyeing red. [SAPPAN.] C. sepiaria, the Mysore Thorn, is so spinous that it constitutes an impenetrable fence. Hyder Ali planted it around fortified places. It is a scandent shrub. There are other species from the East or West Indies or South America.

braziletto-wood, s. The wood of Cæsalpinia brasiliensis. It is used for cabinet work.

Bră-zîl'-î-ân, a. & s. [In Ger. brasilianisch; Fr. Brésilien (s. & a. m.), Brésilienne (s. & a. f.).]

A. As adjective: Pertaining to Brazil.

B. As substantive: A native of Brazil.

“In the land of the Brazilians.”—Darwin: Voyage round the World (ed. 1870), ch. xxi., p. 498.

bră'-zîl-in, s. [From Brazil, and suff. -in.]

Chem.: A coloring matter, $C_{22}H_{20}O_7$, found in Brazil-wood. It crystallizes in yellow prisms, which give a crimson color to a solution of ammonia. Brazilin is converted by nitric acid into styphnic acid, or trinitroresorcin, $C_6H(NO_2)_3(OH)_2$.

brăz'-îng, pr. par., a. & s. [BRAZE, v.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: (See the verb.)

C. As substantive:

Metal.: The act of soldering together the surfaces of iron, copper, brass, &c., with an alloy composed of brass and zinc, sometimes with the addition of a little tin or silver. The surfaces to be united must be rendered perfectly clean and bright. The alloy, in granular form, is usually wetted with ground borax and water, dried, the pieces placed in contact and exposed to the heat of a clear forge-fire, causing the solder to flow between them. This may be assisted by the use of a soldering-iron. (Knight.)

(1) Gen.: In the foregoing sense.

“Could never keep these boys away from church, Or tempt them to an hour of Sabbath breach.”
Wordsworth: The Brothers.

(2) Spec.: Bereavement.

3. That which is broken. Spec.:

(1) Of things material:

(a) The shattered portion of a dilapidated house; the ground after an earthquake, or anything similar.

“The priests had not repaired the breaches of the house.”—2 Kings xii. 6.

“Thou hast made the earth to tremble; thou hast broken it; heal the breaches thereof; for it shaketh.”—Psalms lx. 2.

(b) A broken limb, or anything similar.

“Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth.”—Lev. xxiv. 20.

†(c) An opening in a coast; a cliff, or anything similar.

“Till full he dashes on the rocky mounds,

Where, thro' a shapeless breach, his stream resounds.”

Burns: Written with a Pencil; Falls of Fyers.

(d) A hole, chasm, or rent in a fortification, made by battering guns, or anything similar, for the purpose of giving entrance to a storming party.

“Crowds of sailors and camp followers came into the city through the breach.”—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xvi.

(2) Of things immaterial or abstract:

(a) Gen.: In the foregoing sense.

“A wholesome tongue is a tree of life; but perverseness therein is a breach in the spirit.”—Prov. xv. 4.

(b) Spec.: Broken friendship; difference between people mutually alienated; quarrel.

“To finish it; that so untimely breach

The Prince himselfe halfe seemed to offend.”

Spenser: F. Q., II. x. 68.

† The metaphor being that of a broken bone; the expression “to heal a breach” is common.

II. Law:

(1) Breach of close, i. e., of what is inclosed in fact or in the eye of the law. The entry into another man's land. (Blackstone: Comment., bk. iii., ch. xii.)

(2) Breach of covenant: The violation of a written agreement. (Blackstone: Comment., bk. iii., ch. ix.)

(3) Breach of duty: Violation of the duty incumbent upon one rightly to discharge the functions imposed upon him by the office or trust which he holds. (Blackstone: Comment., bk. iii., ch. ix.)

(4) Breach of the peace: Offenses against the public, involving personal violation of the peace, or incitement or provocation to others to do so. (Blackstone: Comment., bk. iv., ch. xi.)

(5) Breach of pound: The act of breaking into a pound, or any similar place, to rescue one's cattle or other property there inclosed. (Blackstone: Comment., bk. iii., ch. ix.)

(6) Breach of prison: Escape of a prisoner from prison by breaking the building, or in any other way. (Blackstone: Comment., bk. iv., ch. x.)

(7) Breach of promise:

(a) Gen.: Violation of one's pledged word, especially if the promise be written down.

(b) Spec.: Breach of promise of marriage. An action lies for it on the part of either man or woman, though, as a rule, only the latter is believed to be substantially injured or deserve damages.

(8) Breach of trust: The violation of one's duty as trustee, or anything similar.

† Crabb thus distinguishes between breach, break, gap, and chasm: “The idea of an opening is common to these terms, but they differ in the nature of the opening. A breach and a gap are the consequence of a violent removal, which destroys the connection; a break and a chasm may arise from the absence of that which would form a connection. A breach in a wall is made by means of cannon; gaps in fences are commonly the effect of some violent effort to pass through; a break is made in a page of printing by leaving off in the middle of a line; a chasm is left in writing when any words in the sentence are omitted. A breach and a chasm always imply a larger opening than a break or gap. A gap may be made in a knife; a breach is always made in the walls of a building or fortification; the clouds sometimes separate so as to leave small breaks; the ground is sometimes so convulsed by earthquakes as to leave frightful chasms. Breach and chasm are used morally; break and gap seldom otherwise than in application to natural objects.” (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

B. As adjective: Designed for breaking through the wall of a fortification. (See the compound which follows.)

breach-battery, s.

Mil.: A battery erected for the purpose of breaching the wall of a fortification.

brēach, v. t. [From breach, s. (q. v.).] Originally to breach and to breach were but different ways of spelling the same word. (Trench: English Past and Present, p. 65)] To make a breach, i. e., a hole or gap in the wall of a fortification, in a reef of rocks at sea, or anything similar.

“Moreover, in an atoll once breached on opposite sides, from the likelihood of the oceanic and tidal currents passing straight through the breaches, . . .”—Darwin: Voyage round the World (ed. 1870), ch. xx., p. 477.

†brēach'-fūl, a. [Eng. breach; ful(l).] Filled with breaches.

†brēach'-y, a. [Eng. breach; -y.] Tending or prone to make breaches in fences, walls, or anything similar.

(a) Lit.

(b) Fig.: The young leaves and shoots of the Hawthorn (Crataegus oxyacantha), which are sometimes eaten by children in spring.

(2) Bread and milk, bread-and-milk:

(a) Lit.

(b) Fig.: A plant, Cardamine pratensis.

(3) Bread and salt:

(a) Lit.

(b) Fig.: Oaths were formerly sworn by them, perhaps as symbolizing the necessities of life.

“I will trust him better that offereth to swear by bread and salt than him that offereth to swear by the Bible.”—B. Rich: Descr. of Ireland, p. 29.

(4) Bread and water: The necessities of life.

“ . . . and He shall bless thy bread, and thy water.”—Exod. xxiii. 25.

(5) Bread and wine: The elements in the Holy Communion.

“She swore by bread and wine she would not break.”
Shakesp. & Flet.: Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 5.

(6) Cuckoo's bread: A plant, Oxalis Acetosella.

(7) Tartar bread: The fleshy root of a plant, Crambe tatarica.

(8) To be in bad bread: To be in a plight or dilemma. Probably it meant originally to be on short allowance.

II. Technically:

1. Baking: Loaves or cakes made from the flour of wheat, rye, or some other grain, and baked.

(1) Hist.: The art of baking bread is very ancient. It was known to the Egyptians, the Hebrews, the Greeks, the Romans, and other nations. In England bread was made with yeast in 1634. Machinery was used in its production in 1858. Aerated bread was made in 1859 in England, having been in use in this country some years earlier.

(2) Modern process of manufacture: There are two kinds of bread, leavened and unleavened. Leavened, or fermented bread, is prepared by mixing together certain quantities of flour, warm water, salt and yeast, or leaven. After the lapse of some time fermentation sets in, and the dough, or sponge as it is called, becomes permeated with carbonic acid gas, a small quantity of alcohol being also formed. As soon as the mass is in a brisk state of fermentation, fresh portions of flour and water are added, and the whole thoroughly mixed or kneaded. The dough is next cut and shaped into loaves, and these, after being left for about two hours, during which they swell to nearly double their size, are then ready for the oven. The heat of the oven checks the fermentation, and expels all the alcohol, and most of the carbonic acid gas.

The art of bread-making consists in producing a light, porous crumb, and a pale-colored crust. The crumb should consist of dextrine, starch, gluten, and from 35 to 40 per cent. of water. The crust should consist almost entirely of dextrine.

Leaven, which is now seldom used in this country, is a mixture of flour, potatoes and water, kept in a warm place till it begins to ferment.

Unleavened, or unfermented bread, is of two kinds. In the one, flour and water only are used, and this produces a heavy and compact bread. In the other, an acid and a carbonate are added for the purpose of disengaging carbonic acid gas, which, in imitation of yeast, raises the dough and renders the bread light and porous. The substances used are carbonate of ammonia or carbonate of soda, in combination with hydrochloric or tartaric acids. None of these ingredients are deleterious; but by far the best is carbonate of ammonia, as it is entirely driven off in the oven.

Aerated bread is prepared by forcing pure carbonic acid gas into the dough contained in a strong iron vessel. When this carbonated dough is introduced into the oven the gas expands and escapes, leaving the bread light and porous. Graham bread is ordinary white bread with from 15 to 20 per cent. of fine bran.

Whole meal bread, made from unsifted ground wheat, is the only true Graham bread, being richer in nutrients than white bread. The amount of nitrogenous matter in white bread varies from 5 to 8 per cent., while in whole meal bread it rises to 14 per cent.

Brown bread is bread made of a mixture of wheat, or rye flour, and Indian corn meal. It is sometimes sweetened.

"Pumpernickel" is a German cant name for schwarz brod=black bread, made of rye flour and flavored with anise or fennel seeds. It is the common bread of the mass of the German speaking peoples.

The adulteration of bread may be carried on to a large extent. The quality of a loaf is very frequently judged by its whiteness; when, therefore, an unscrupulous baker has used an inferior or damaged flour, he finds that by adding alum or sulphate of copper, he is able to produce a loaf equal in whiteness to one made from the finest flour. These two substances are, however, dangerous adulterants. They not only render the bread indigestible, but when taken into the system for any length of time, are apt to disorder the stomach and produce various diseases. It should also be remembered that sulphate of copper is a poison.

Boiled rice, beans and potatoes are also frequently used to adulterate bread. They are harmless in themselves, but are added for cheapness, and to increase the weight of the loaf, these substances retaining more water than wheat flour. In a recent experiment, it was proved that when half-a-pound of rice flour was substituted for half-a-pound of wheat flour in a two-pound loaf, the loaf was found to contain five per cent. more moisture than that found in a loaf made from pure wheat flour. [SHIP-BREAD, CASSADA-BREAD.]

2. Theology:

(1) The first of the two elements in the communion.

¶ To break bread: To partake of the communion. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them."—Acts xx. 7.

(2) With reference to the descent of manna in the wilderness. Christ or His death accepted by faith as the spiritual nourishment of the soul.

"I am the bread of life."—John vi. 35. (See the whole passage, 31-58.)

3. Zool.: Crumb of bread sponge. [CRUMB.]

B. As adj.: Consisting of or resembling bread, or in any way pertaining or relating to it.

bread-artist, s. A contemptuous appellation for one whose thoughts are exclusively occupied with the routine of labor for his daily bread.

"Here, circling like the gin-horse, for whom partial or total blindness is no evil, the Bread-artist can travel contentedly round and round, still fancying that it is forward and forward."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. iv.

bread-crumb, s. A fragment of the soft part of bread; spec., if broken off from the rest.

"... my supper (bread-crumb boiled in milk)."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. ii.

bread-fruit, s. & a.

A. As subst.: The fruit of the tree described below. It is about the size and shape of a child's head. The surface is reticulated; the skin is thick, the eatable part lying between it and the core. The latter is snow-white, and about the same consistence as new bread. It is first divided into three or four parts, and then roasted, or it may be taken boiled, or fried in palm oil. It is extensively used in the South Sea Islands and elsewhere.

B. As adj.: Producing the fruit described under A.

Bread-fruit tree: The English name of Artocarpus incisa, a tree of the order Artocarpaceæ. [ARTOCARPUS.] It has pinnatifid leaves with sinuatures, while the allied Jackfruit, Artocarpus integrifolia, as its name imports, has them, as a rule, entire. Some, however, think the two species not properly distinct. For the fruit of the bread-tree see above. [BREAD-FRUIT.] The wood is useful; the inner bark may be made into cloth; the male catkins serve for tinder, and the juice for birdlime, or as a cement for broken crockery. The tree grows in the South Sea Islands and in the East Indies. From the former place it was introduced into the West Indies in 1793, and thence to South America. [BLIGHIA, etym.]

bread-knife, s. A knife for cutting bread.

*bread-lepe, s. [A. S. bread, and leap=a basket.] A bread-basket.

"... me drempte ic bar bread-lepes thre."—Story of Gen. & Exod., 2, 078.

bread-making, a. Making or designed to be used in making bread.

Bread-making machine: A machine in which flour and water are mixed and kneaded. In some machines of this character the dough is rolled flat and cut into loaves, which are laid aside to rise before baking. [BREAD.]

bread-nut, s.

Bot.: The English name of Brosimum, a genus of plants doubtfully placed at the end of the Urticaceæ (Nettleworts). The fruit of the Brosimum Ali-castrum, or Jamaica bread-nut, tastes like chestnut, and has been used to sustain negroes and others during times of scarcity.

bread-rasp, s. A rasp used by bakers in removing the burnt crust of loaves and rolls, especially of French rolls.

bread-room, s.

Naut.: A "room," or portion of the hold of a ship separated from the rest, and designed to furnish a place for the bread and biscuit on board.

bread-root, s.

Bot.: The English name of the Psoralea esculenta, a papilionaceous plant with quinate leaves and dense axillary spikes of flowers. It is found in the Rocky mountain regions. Its roots are sweet and nutritious, and are eaten like potatoes.

bread-slicer, s. The same as bread-knife (q. v.).

†bread-study, s. An appellation for a profession, calling, or occupation, viewed as a means of gaining a livelihood.

"Is it not well that there should be what we call Professions, or Bread-studies (Brodzwecke), preappointed us?"—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. iv.

bread-stuff, s. The materials used in making bread.

†bread-tree, s.

1. The same as bread-fruit tree (q. v.).
2. The name given in North Australia to Gardenia edulis, called also Alibertia edulis.

*bread, in compos. [BROAD.] (O. Scotch.)

*bread (1), v. t. [BRAID.] To braid, to embroider, to twist.

"Then, taking thrise three heares from off her head, Them trebly breaded in a threefold lace."—Spenser: F. Q., III. ii. 50.

*bread (2), v. t. [A. S. brædan, gebrædan; Sw. bræda; Dan. bræde; Ger. breiten.] To make broad, to extend, to spread.

*bræd'-chîp-pêr, s. [Eng. bread; chipper.] One who chips bread; a baker's servant; an under butler.

"No abuse, Hal, o' my honor; no abuse. Not to dispraise me, and call me pantler, and breadchipper, and I know not what?"—Shakesp.: Hen. IV., Pt. II., ii. 4.

†bræd'-corn, *bred-corne, s. [Eng. bread; corn. In Ger. brodcorn.] Corn or grain of which bread is made. Spec., corn to be ground into bread-meal for brown bread. (Skeat.)

"There was not one drop of beer in the town; the bread and breadcorn sufficed not for six days."—Hayward.

"And hange myn hoper at myn hals instead of a scriffe;

A bushel of bredcorne byngre me ther inne."—Piers Plowman: Vis., vi. 63-4.

*bread'-ed, pa. par. & a. [BRAIDED.]

"Her golden lockes she roundly did uptye In breaded tramels, that no looser heares Did out of order stray about her daintie eares."—Spenser: F. Q., II. ii. 15.

†bræd'-en, a. [Eng. bread; -en.] Made of bread.

bræd'-lëss, a. [Eng. bread; and suff. -less=without.] Without bread; not having been able to obtain bread.

"Plump peers, and breadless bards alike are dull."—P. Whitehead: State Dunces.

*bread'-lin-gis, adv. [Scotch bread=broad, and suff. -lingis.] Broadwise, with the flat end of a sword or other weapon.

"... and strake aone of them breadlingis with his sword."—Bannatyne's Journal, p. 173.

brædth, *brêdethe, *bredth, *brêdthe, *breed, *breede, *brede, s. & a. [A. S. brædo, brædu; from brād=broad. In Sw. bredd; Dan. brede; Dut. breede; Ger. breite; Mæso-Goth. braidei.] [BROAD, a.; BREAD (2), v.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit. Of things material: The width of any surface or solid, as contradistinguished from the length of the former and the length and thickness of the latter. In general it differs from length by being less in amount than it, and from thickness by being more, or by being on the surface while thickness is represented by a certain amount of depth. [HANDBREADTH.]

"That he destroyed this lond in brede & in length."—R. Brunne, p. 41.

"... & the length was as large as the bredth of it, ... & the leght and the bredthe, & the heygth of it were equal."—Bible (1551), Apocalypse, cxxi.

"... that a man myght nat se the bredethe of an acre of land fro hym."—Berners: Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i., ch. 131.

"A cubit shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof."—Exod. xxx. 2.

2. Fig. Of things not material:

(1) Gen.: Mentally conceived of as vast in literal breadth.

"... the breede, and the lengthe, and the highnesse, and the depnesse . . ."—Wycliffe (Purvey): Eph. iii. 18.

"May be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, . . ."—Ephes. iii. 18, 19.

(2) Spec. Of a doctrine or statement: Absence of careful limitation.

II. Technically:

1. Shipwrighting: The thwart measure of a ship at any designated place. The beam is the extreme breadth; that is, at the widest part.

2. Painting: "Breadth" of effect, or simply "breadth," is the quality of giving prominence to the leading features of a painting by colors massively laid on, bright lights, dark shadows, and similar effects, rather than crowding the canvas with a multiplicity of less important details.

B. As adjective: Of or belonging to the width of anything; marking the width.

breadth-line, s.

Shipwrighting: A line of the ship lengthwise, following the curve indicated by the ends of the timbers.

†brædth'-lëss, a. [Eng. breadth; and suff. -less.] Without breadth.

"The term of latitude is breadthless line."—More: Song of the Soul, ii. 2.

bræd'-win-nër, s. [Eng. bread; winner.]

1. Lit. (of persons): One who, by means of his labor, wins bread. Specially used of a father winning "bread" for his wife and children.

"We were saddled with his family, which was the first taste and preening of what war is when it comes into our hearths, and among the breadwinners."—Ann. of the Par., p. 162.

†2. Fig.: Any instrument of a profession, by the use of which one earns a sustenance. (Jamieson.)

"'Tse gang hame—and then get my breadwinner' [he meant his fiddle]."—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xxiv.

brêak, *brêake, *breke, *brek-en, *bree-ken, *brak-yn, *brek-yn (pret. broke, †brake, brec*, brek*, brak*, brac*, bræc*; pa. par. broken, †broke, brok*, ibroken*), v. t. & i. [A. S. brecan, pret. bræc, gebræc, pa. par. brocen, gebrocen=(1) to break, vanquish, overcome, weaken, open, move, excite, produce; (2) to sail (Bosworth); O. S. brecan; Icel. bráka, braka; Sw. braka, bråka; Dan. brække; Dut. breken, verbreken; O. Fries. breka; Mæso-Goth. brikan; Ger. brechen=to break, brocken=to make into crumbs; O. H. Ger. prechan; Lat. frango, from the root frag [FRAGMENT]; Gr. rhêgnumi=to break. Cf. also ereikō=to rend, to shiver; Sansc. bhrag, prag=to break; Heb. paraq=to break. Break was manifestly imitated from the sound of wood, or some other material substance, in process of being fractured. Break was originally the same word as breach, and it is cognate with wreck.] [BREACH, WRECK.]

A. Transitive:

I. Literally. With a material thing for an object:

1. To cause any material thing to separate into two or more fragments by means of a blow or other violence applied to it which overcomes its cohesion.

(1) To do so by the hand or by an instrument which produces an irregular fracture instead of a cut.

"The voice of the Lord breaketh the cedars; yea, the Lord breaketh the cedars of Lebanon."—Ps. xxix. 5.

¶ It may be used also of anything composed of separate portions or atoms more loosely cohering than is the case in a material thing of ordinary tenacity.

"... the Puritan warriors . . . never failed to destroy and break in pieces whatever force was opposed to them."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. i.

fâte, fât, färe, amidst, whât, fâll, father; wê, wêt, hère, camêl, hêr, thêre; pine, pît, sîre, sîr, marîne; gô, pôt, or, wôre, wôlf, wôrck, whô, sôn; mûte, cûb, cûre, unite, cûr, râle, fûll; trÿ, Sÿrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = â. qu = kw.

(2) To do so by means of an instrument causing a clean cut instead of a fracture. [See C. 3. To break a deer.]

2. To burst open anything closed or obstructed by applying force to it, to clear a passage, to make a hole through anything.

"Into my hand he forced the tempting gold, While I with modest struggling broke his hold."
Gay.

"O could we break our way by force!"—Milton.

3. Of the bones and joints: To break the bones or to dislocate the joints. [See C. To break one's arm, leg, &c.]

4. Of a blow, a falling body, &c.: To intercept, to arrest the descent or the progress of, to mitigate the severity or lighten the effects of a fall. (Lit. & fig.)

"As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short, and looks about for some kind shrub
To break his dreadful fall."
Dryden.

"She held my hand, the destin'd blow to break,
Then from her rosy lips began to speak."
Ibid.

5. Of light: To penetrate, to pierce, to diffuse itself among.

"By a dim winking lamp, which feebly broke The gloomy vapor, he lay stretch'd along."
Dryden.

II. Figuratively: To tame, to subdue, to teach to obey, to render more or less docile or manageable.

1. With one of the inferior animals for its object:

"To break the stubborn colt, to bend the bow."
Dryden.

"Such a horse is well broken; . . ."—Darwin: Voyage round the World (ed. 1870), ch. viii., p. 153.

¶ In this sense often followed by in, especially when used of a horse as yet untamed. [See break-in.]

2. With man for its object:

(1) To tame, to subdue.

"Why, then thou canst not break her to the lute?
Why, no; for she hath broke the lute to me."
Shakesp.: Tam. of the Shrew, ii. 1.

¶ Often followed by of in such an expression as to "break a person of a habit."

(2) To dismiss from office.

"I see a great officer broken."—Swift.

(3) To render bankrupt.

"Attracts all fees, and little lawyers breaks."
Dryden.

"A command or call to be liberal, all of a sudden impoverishes the rich, breaks the merchant, and shuts up every private man's exchequer."—South.

3. With an immaterial thing for its object:

(1) Of the health or strength: To impair, to shatter. [C. 14 (2) (b).]

"Have not some of his vices weaken'd his body, and broke his health?"—Tillotson.

(2) Of the will or the temper of one of the inferior animals, or of man:

"Behold young Juba, the Numidian prince,
With how much care he forms himself to glory,
And breaks the fierceness of his native temper."
Addison.

"For to bend and break the spirits of men gave him pleasure; . . ."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. viii.

(3) Of the heart, the feelings, or emotions:

"I'll brave her to her face,
I'll give my anger its free course against her;
Thou shalt see, Phoenix, how I'll break her pride."
Philips.

†(4) Of the "brains" or intellect: To injure, to weaken.

"If any dabbler in poetry dares venture upon the experiment, he will only break his brains."—Felton.

(5) Of the voice: [B., II. 4.]

(6) Of any immaterial thing capable of violation: To violate, to infringe; to act contrary to. Used specially—

(a) Of hours.

"Lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time;
So much they spur their expedition."
Shakesp.: Two Gent. of Verona, v. 1.

(b) Of promises, vows, contracts, or anything similar.

"When I break this oath of mine."
Shakesp.: Love's Labor's Lost, v. 2.

" . . . and I said, I will never break my covenant with you."—Judg. ii. 1.

(c) Of laws, human or Divine.

"Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause."
Dryden.

(7) Of any immaterial thing capable of having its continuity interrupted: To interrupt for a greater or less length of time. Used of—

(a) Peace.

"Did not our worthies of the house,
Before they broke the peace, break vows?"
Hudibras.

(b) Sleep.

"Some solitary cloister will I choose,
Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep, Broke by the melancholy midnight bell."
Dryden.

(c) Speech, or the voice.

"Break their talk, Mistress Quickly; my kinsman shall speak for himself."—Shakesp.: Mer. Wives, iii. 4.

"The father was so moved, that he could only command his voice, broke with sighs and sobbings, so far as to bid her proceed."—Addison.

(d) Silence.

"The poor shade shiv'ring stands, and must not break
His painful silence, till the mortal speak."—Tickell.

(e) A fast. [BREAKFAST.]

(f) Company or companionship.

"Did not Paul and Barnabas dispute with that vehemence, that they were forced to break company."—Atterbury.

B. Intransitive:

(3) To quarrel with; to cease to be friendly with.

"Can there be anything of friendship in snares, hooks, and trepans? Whosoever breaks with his friend upon such terms, has enough to warrant him in so doing, both before God and man."—South.

†(a) Crabb thus distinguishes between to break, to rack, to rend, and to tear: "The forcible division of any substance is the common characteristic of these terms. Break is the generic term, the rest specific: everything raked, rent, or torn is broken, but not vice versa. Break has, however, a specific meaning, in which it is comparable with the others. Breaking requires less violence than either of the others: brittle things may be broken with the slightest touch, but nothing can be raked without intentional violence of an extraordinary kind. Glass is quickly broken; a table is raked. Hard substances only are broken or raked; but everything of a soft texture and composition may be rent or torn. Breaking is performed by means of a blow; racking by that of a violent concussion; but rending and tearing are the consequences of a pull."

(b) To break, to bruise, to squeeze, to pound, and to crush are thus discriminated: "Break always implies the separation of the component parts of a body; bruise denotes simply the destroying the continuity of the parts. Hard, brittle substances, as glass, are broken; soft, pulpy substances, as flesh or fruits, are bruised. The operation of bruising is performed either by a violent blow or by pressure; that of squeezing by compression only. Metals, particularly lead and silver, may be bruised; fruits may be either bruised or squeezed. In this latter sense bruise applies to the harder substances, or indicates a violent compression; squeeze is used for soft substances or a gentle compression. The kernels of nuts are bruised; oranges and apples are squeezed. To pound is properly to bruise in a mortar so as to produce a separation of parts; to crush is the most violent and destructive of all operations, which amounts to the total dispersion of all the parts of a body. What is broken may be made whole again; what is bruised or squeezed may be restored to its former tone and consistency; what is pounded is only reduced to smaller parts for convenience; but what is crushed is destroyed."

(c) The following is the distinction between to break, to burst, to crack, and to split: "Break denotes a forcible separation of the constituent parts of a body. Burst and crack are onomatopœias, or imitations of the sounds which are made in bursting and cracking. Splitting is a species of cracking that takes place in some bodies in a similar manner without being accompanied with the noise. Breaking is generally the consequence of some external violence; everything that is exposed to violence may, without distinction, be broken. Bursting arises mostly from an extreme tension; hollow bodies, when over filled, burst. Cracking is caused by the application of excessive heat, or the defective texture of the substance: glass cracks; the earth cracks; leather cracks. Splitting may arise from a combination of external and internal causes; wood in particular is liable to split. A thing may be broken in any shape, form, and degree; bursting leaves a wide gap; cracking and splitting leave a long aperture, the latter of which is commonly wider than that of the former." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

"The field which is designed for bear gets two furrows; the one a break, the other clean."—Surv. Banffs., App., p. 37.

(ii) Of a hill: A hollow part. [In Icel. brecka is = a declivity.]

(iii) A division of land in a farm. (Scotch.)

"They shall dung no part of their former crofting, till these four new breaks are brought in. Let them give ten or twelve bolls of lime to each acre of their oat-leave break."—Maxwell: Sel. Trans., p. 216.

(iv) Of a figure drawn: An interrupted portion.

"The surrounding zones likewise show traces, as may be seen in the drawing (fig. 53), of indentations, or rather breaks, . . ."—Darwin: Descent of Man (1871), pt. ii., ch. xiv., vol. ii., p. 136.

(v) Of anything written or printed: A line to mark that the sense is suspended or that something is omitted.

"All modern trash is Set forth with num'rous breaks and dashes." Swift.

(2) Fig. Of things not material: A pause, an interruption.

"Thy constant flow of love, that knew no fall,
Ne'er roughen'd by those cataracts and breaks
That humor interposed too often makes."

Cowper: On the Receipt of my Mother's Picture.

4. That which breaks. [II. 10, 11.]

5. An irrelevant, thoughtless, embarrassing or improper speech or action.

† An individual is said to make a "bad break" when he is guilty of improper behavior. (U. S. Colloq.)

II. Technically:

1. Cricket: The twist of a ball as it is bowled, generally spoken of a twist or turn from the off side.

2. Billiards: A player's turn in the game; also the number of points scored by a player continuously without a miss.

3. Flax manufacture: An instrument for taking the rind off flax. (It is also written brake and braik.)

4. Agric. & Mach.: The same as break-harrow (q. v.).

5. Naut.: A sudden change of level, as of a deck. The break of a poop-deck is where it ends forward.

6. Arch.: A projection or recess from the surface or wall of a building.

7. Baking: A wooden bench on which dough is kneaded by means of a lever called a break-staff. The weight of the person, often in a sitting posture, is thrown upon the staff, which moves in a semi-circular orbit around the bench, keeping up a saltatory motion by its flexibility and the dancing action of the operator. By this means the dough is worked up very dry, and makes the best kind of crackers.

8. Fortif.: A change from the general direction of the curtain near its extremity in the construction with orillons and retired flanks. [BRISURE.]

9. Geol.: A "fault," or rather a dislocation in which there is a very great upcast or downcast.

"To describe faults of this kind we want some new technical word. They are neither anticlinal's nor synclinal's, nor are they faults in the technical sense of the word. The word break, if geologists would consent to use that word technically, might perhaps serve for their designation."—Prof. Sedgworth, in Q. J. Geol. Soc., viii. (1852), pt. i. 39.

10. Printing: The piece of metal contiguous to the shank of a type, so called because it is broken off in finishing. [See also I. 3.]

11. Telegraphy: An apparatus to interrupt or change the direction of electric currents. It is called also a rheotome or a commutator.

12. Engineering: The same as BRAKE (q. v.).

13. Railway carriages, vehicles, &c.: A break-van (q. v.).

14. Music.

(1) Of the human voice: The point of junction in the quality of tenor, soprano and alto voices. A genuine bass voice has no break. The lower range is called voce di petto, or chest voice; the upper, voce di testa, or head voice; and the place of junction is called the break. (Stainer & Barrett.)

(2) Of the clarinet: An interruption in the tone of the instrument between B flat and B natural.

(3) Of an organ stop: The sudden alteration of the proper scale-series of the pipes by returning to those of an octave lower in pitch. (Stainer & Barrett.)

(4) Of the scale of a piano: The points at which in the construction of a modern piano are left intervals between the strings; they are usually two in number, dividing the scale into three parts—bass, middle, and treble. Below the second break the strings are not damped, i. e., furnished with felt blocks to prevent vibration after the finger is lifted from the key, the treble string being too short to need dampers.

break-down, s.

1. Lit.: The state of being broken and falling down. (Used of a coach or anything similar.)

2. Fig.: The failure of anything.

3. Tech.: A kind of dance of a boisterous character specially in favor with negroes.

break-harrow, s. A large harrow. (Scotch.)

"Then harrow again with a break-harrow, or larger harrow than ordinary, and spare not."—Maxwell: Sel. Trans., p. 249.

† It is called more simply a break, or brake. [BRAKE.] break-in, s.

Carp.: A hole made in brickwork with a ripping chisel, and designed to be a receptacle for the end of a beam or anything similar.

break-iron, s.

Carp.: The iron screwed on the top of a plane-bit to bend upward and break the shaving. Its edge is from $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch from the edge of the cutting-bit.

break-joint, s. A structure in which the joints of the parts or courses are made to alternate with unbroken surfaces, as in the continuous railroad rail, in brick-laying, shingling, and numerous other mechanic arts.

break-line, s. Print.: The last line of a paragraph, when containing blank space.

bōl, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, çhis; -cian, -tian = shan. -tion, -sion = shün; -tion, -sion = chün. -tious, -cious, in, aš; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f -sious = chūs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bel, dql break-up, s. The act of breaking up, the state of being broken up.

"The break-up and densification of both of these."—Q. J. Geol. Soc., xxiii, pt. i., 410.

brēak'-a-ble, a. [Eng. break, and suff. -able.] Able to be broken. (Colgrave.)

brēak'-age (age as ig), s. [Eng. break, and Eng., &c., suff. -age.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. The act of breaking anything.

"In all the sports of children, were it only in their wanton breakages and defacements, you shall discern a creative instinct."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. ii.

2. The state of being broken.

"... though no doubt the degradation of a lofty cliff would be more rapid from the breakage of the fallen fragments."—Darwin: Origin of Species (ed. 1859), ch. ix., p. 286.

3. Damage done to crockery or other goods by being broken in transitu.

4. A money compensation for such damage.

II. Naut.: The leaving of empty spaces in stowing the hold. (Smyth.)

brēak'-ēr, brēk'-ēr, brēk'-ere, s. [Eng. break; -er. In M. H. Ger. brechære.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. One who breaks anything.

(1) Lit.: One who breaks any material thing.

(a) As an independent word.

"The breaker is come up before them: they have broken up, and have passed through the gate, . . ."—Micah ii. 13.

(b) Often in composition; as, "an image-breaker."
(2) Fig.: One who violates a promise, a law, human or divine, or anything not made of matter. (Often also in composition; as, "a law-breaker," "a Sabbath-breaker.")

"... if thou be a breaker of the law, . . ."—Rom. ii. 25.

"Without understanding, covenant-breakers, . . ."—Rom. i. 31.

2. (Chiefly in compos.): An animal which breaks anything. [BONE-BREAKER.]

3. An inanimate thing which does so.

4. A crested wave broken into foam while passing over a sand-bank, or flinging itself with fury on the shore. (Generally in the plural.)

"Old sailors were amazed at the composure which he preserved amidst roaring breakers on a perilous coast."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. vii.

5. A pier or some similar structure placed in a river to prevent the ice from injuring the supports of the arches.

II. Technically:

1. Naut.: A small cask for ship's use. Employed for bringing water aboard in boats, or for containing the water required for a boat's crew absent from the vessel on duty. The gang-cask is kept on deck, and contains the drinking-water for the ship's company, being replenished from day to day from the tanks. (Knight.)

2. Flax-manufacture: The first carding-machine which operates upon the parcels of tow from a creeping-sheet. The finisher is the final carding-machine, and operates upon a lap formed of slivers of lime. (Knight.)

brēak'-fast, brēke'-fast, s. & a. [Eng. break; fast.]

A. As substantive:

I. Literally:

1. The act of breaking a fast, that is, of eating after having been for some time without food. Specially the first meal in the day.

"... while my wife and daughters employed themselves in providing breakfast, . . ."—Goldsmith: Vicar of Wakefield, ch. iv.

2. The time when the first meal of the day is eaten.

3. That which is eaten when the fast is broken.

(1) At the first meal of the day.

"A good piece of bread would be often the best breakfast for my young master."—Locke.

(2) At any meal which breaks the temporary fast of a man or an animal.

"Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have been a breakfast to the beast."

Shakesp.: Two Gent. of Verona, v. 4.

II. Fig.: That which satisfies one's appetite, desire or aspiration of the human soul at the commencement of one's career. [Corresponding to 3 (2).]

"Hope is a good breakfast, but it is a bad supper."—Bacon.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to the first meal of the day, or to the time or place where it is eaten.

"One morn he came not to her hand
As he was wont to come,
And, on her finger perch'd, to stand Picking his breakfast crumb."

Cowper: Epitaph on a Redbreast.

"Breakfast time, however, is always a cheerful stage of the day; . . ."—De Quincey: Works, 2d ed., i. 96.

breakfast-parlor, s. A parlor designed for the accommodation of a family at breakfast.

"How jocund was their breakfast-parlor, fann'd
By yon blue water's breath."

Campbell: Theodric.

brēak'-fast, v. i. & t. [Eng. break; fast.]

A. Intrans.: To eat the first meal in the day.

"He breakfasted alone; . . ."—De Quincey: Works, 2d ed., i. 165.

†B. Trans.: To provide or furnish with the first meal in the morning. (Milton.)

brēak'-fast-ing, pr. par., a. & s. [BREAKFAST.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As substantive:

1. Gen.: The act of taking the first meal in the day.

2. Spec.: The act of doing so as one of an invited breakfast-party.

"No breakfastings with them, which consume a great deal of time."—Lord Chesterfield.

brēak'-ing, brēak'-yng, brēk'-yng, pr. par., a. & s. [BREAK, v.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"As if it bore all peace within,
Nor left one breaking heart behind!"

Moore: The Fire-Worshippers.

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of an act:

(1) The act of fracturing anything.

"And breaking of windows, which, you know, maketh breaches?"—Swift: The Famous Speech-Maker.

(2) The act of coming forth suddenly.

"And Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of the day."—Gen. xxxii. 24.

"Until the breaking of the light."

Tennyson: To—

 (3) The act of vomiting.

"Brakyng or parbrakyng. Vomitus, evomitus."—Prompt. Parv.

2. Of a state: The state of being broken or fractured.

(1) Gen.: In the foregoing sense.

"Therefore this iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall; swelling out in a high wall, whose breaking cometh suddenly at an instant."—Isaiah xxx. 13.

(2) Spec.: Bankruptcy.

II. Woolen manufacture: A process in the worsted or long-wool manufacture. The combed slivers are laid upon a traveling-apron and joined endwise, to make continuous lengths.

breaking-down, s. & a.

A. As substantive: The act of fracturing and crushing downward.

B. As adjective: Fracturing and making to fall; rolling so as to consolidate. [Breaking-down rollers.]

Breaking-down rollers:

Metal.: Rollers used to consolidate metal by rolling it while hot.

breaking-engine, s.

Machinery: The first of a series of carding-machines, to receive and act on the lap from the lapper; it has usually coarser clothing than the finishing-cards. [CARDING-MACHINE.]

breaking-frame, s.

Worsted-manufacture: A machine in which slivers of long-stapled wool are planked or spliced together and then drawn out to, say, eight times their original length. The slivers are made by hand-combs, and taper toward each end. Each is laid lapping half its length upon the preceding sliver, and the passage between rollers of gradually increasing speed attenuates the sliver. (Knight.)

breaking-in, s.

1. The act of bursting suddenly in upon. (Lit. & fig.)

"They came upon me as a wide breaking in of waters; . . ."—Job xxx. 14.

2. The act or process of taming a young horse.

breaking-joint, s.

Arch.: The same as BREAK-JOINT (q. v.).

breaking-machine, s.

Flax-manufacture: A machine for shortening flax-staple, to adapt it to be worked by a certain kind of machinery. Long-flax or long-line becomes cut-flax or cut-line. The machine is also known as a cutting-machine or flax-breaker.

breaking-out, breaking out, s. The act of suddenly breaking forth or appearing.

"... letters informing him of the breaking out of scarlet fever among his children."—Tyndall: Frag. of Science, 3d ed., xi. 314.

brēak'-mān, s. [BRAKEMAN.]

brēak'-neck, brēake'-neck, s. & a. [Eng. break; neck.]

A. As substantive:

1. A fall by which the neck is broken.

2. A precipice fitted to break the neck of any one who falls over it. (Lit. & fig.)

"I must

Forsake the court; to do 't or no, is certain
To me a breakneck."

Shakesp.: Winter's Tale, i. 2

B. As adjective: Fitted to break the neck; in which the neck is likely to be broken.

"Alas, and the leaps from raft to raft were too often of a breakneck character; . . ."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. iii., ch. ix.

"This way the chamois leapt: her nimble feet
Have baffled me; my gains to-day will scarce Repay my break-neck travail."

Byron: Manfred, i. 2.

brēak'-prōm-ise, s. [Eng. break; promise.] One who habitually breaks his promise.

"I will think you the most pathological break-promise and the most hollow lover."—Shakesp.: As You Like It, iv. 1.

brēak'-shāre, s. [A corruption of braxy (?) (q. v.).] Diarrhœa in sheep. (Ogilvie.)

brēak'-stōne, s. [The Eng. translation of Lat. saxifraga—a plant, anciently supposed to dissolve "stones"—i. e., calculi in the bladder.]

1. Pop. Bot.: Any plant of the genus Saxifraga (Saxifrage). (Prior.)

2. Pimpinella Saxifraga. (Prior.)

3. Alchemilla arvensis. (Prior.)

4. Sagina procumbens. (Prior.) (Britten & Hol- brēak'-vōw, s. [Eng. break; vow.] One who habitually breaks any vows which he may make.

"That daily break-vow, he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids."

Shakesp.: King John, ii. 2.

brēak'-wā-tēr, s. & a. [Eng. break; water.]

A. As substantive:

Ord. Lang. & Hydraul. Engineering: A pier, wall, mole, sunken hulk, or anything similar, placed at the entrance of a harbor, at the exposed part of an anchorage, or in any such situation, with the view of deadening the force of the waves which roll in from the ocean. There are several notable breakwaters in this country—one of the longest and most notable being that in Lake Michigan protecting the harbor of the city of Chicago. It is peculiar in its construction, being built perpendicularly and encased with wooden beams. The Delaware breakwater, in Delaware bay, is built with sloping sides, being much broader at its base than on top. Other notable breakwaters are those at Cherbourg, France, and Plymouth, England. The Chicago breakwater, at the time of its construction, was considered a novel feat of engineering. [MOLE (2).]

"The heaviest vessels were therefore placed on the left, highest up the stream, to form something of a breakwater for the smaller craft crossing below."—Arnold: Hist. of Rome, vol. iii., ch. xliii., p. 77.

"... at low water its summit is left dry, and it might then be mistaken for a breakwater erected by Cyclopean workmen."—Darwin: Voyage round the World (ed. 1870), ch. xxi., p. 498.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to the structure described under A.

breakwater-glacis, s.

Hydraulic Engineering: A storm pavement. The sloping stone paving next the sea in piers or breakwaters.

brēam, brem, breme, s. [Fr. brème; Provenc. Fr. brāme; O. Fr. bresme; L. Lat. bresnia, braximus; Sw. braxen; Dan. & Dut. brasen; O. L. Ger. bressuno; (N. H.) Ger. brassen; M. H. Ger. brahsen, brasme, prahse, prahsme; O. H. Ger. brachse, brahsina, brahsema.] [BARS, BASSE.]

Ichthyology & Ordinary Language:

1. Spec.: The Carp Bream, Abramis brama. It is of a yellowish-white color, which changes, through age, to a yellowish-brown. The sides are golden, the cheeks and gill-covers silver-white, the fins light-colored, tinged, the ventral one with red and the others with brown. It is found in deep waters and lakes. It is sought after by anglers, who, however, consider the flesh insipid.

"And many a rem and many a luce in stewe."

Chaucer: C. T., Prol., 356.

"The bream, being at full growth, is a large fish."—Walton: Angler.

2. Gen.: The English name of the several fishes belonging to the family Cyprinidæ and the genus Abramis. The best known species are: (1) the Bream or Carp Bream (Abramis brama), already described (see 1); (2) the White Bream, or Bream-flat (A. blicca); and (3) the Pomeranian Bream (A. Buggenhagii). The species are found in this country and in Europe, but are of little value as food.

3. [SEA-BREAM.]

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camel, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

bréam, †bróom, v. t. [Etymology doubtful. Cf. Ger. brennen=to burn. (Mahn.)] To burn ooze, seaweed, &c., from the bottom of a vessel.

bréam-lîng, pr. par. & s. [BREAM, v.]

A. As present participle: (See the verb.)

B. As substantive:

Naut.: The act of cleansing the ooze, shells, seaweed, &c., from the bottom of a ship by a flashing fire and scraping.

†brear, †breare, s. [BRIER.]

“ . . . by a narrow way,
Scattered with bushy thornes and ragged breares.”
Spenser: F. Q., I. x. 35.

bréard, s. [BREER (2).]

1. Sing.: The first appearance of grain.

2. Pl.: The short flax recovered from the first tow by a second hackling. The tow, thrown off by this second hackling, is called backings.

“To be sold, a large quantity of white and blue breards, fit for spinning yarn, 4 to 6 lib. per spindle.”—Edinburgh Evening Courant, Sept. 1, 1804.

bréas-kit, s. [BRISKET.]

bréast, bréaste, brest, breste, s. & a. [A. S. bréost=the breast, the mind; O. Sax. bríost; Icel. brjóst; Sw. bröst; Dan. bryst; Dut. borst; Mæso-Goth. brusts (pl.); Ger. brust. From A. S. berstan=to burst; O. Sax. brestan.] [BURST, v.] Hence the breast is the part which bursts out, that is, swells out beyond the parts around.

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) Sing.: The forepart of the human body in either sex between the neck and the upper part of the abdomen; also the analogous part in animals.

“Sal gliden on hise breast nether.”

Story of Gen. & Exod., 370.

“ . . . but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.”—Lu. xviii. 13.

(2) Plur.: The mammæ, paps, or protuberant glands existing in the female sex of man and the higher animals, and in a rudimentary state also in the male sex. They are designed for the secretion of milk.

“ . . . or why the breasts that I should suck.”—Job iii. 12.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Of symbols or associations directly connected with the human breast:

(a) Of the breast viewed as essential to good singing:* A musical voice; voice in general.

“Pray ye stay a little; let's hear him sing, he has a fine breast.”—Beaum. & Flet. Pilgrim, iii. 6.

“Which said queristers, after their breasts are changed, &c.”—Strype: Life of Abp. Parker, p. 9.

† To have a good breast: To have a good voice; to be a good singer.

“In singing, the sound is originally produced by the action of the lungs; which are so essential an organ in this respect, that to have a good breast was formerly a common periphrasis, to denote a good singer.”—Hist. of Music, vol. iii., p. 466. (Nares.)

(b) Of the breast viewed as the seat of the emotions, of the appetites, of conscience, of courage, &c.

(i) As the seat of the emotions in general.

“If happiness hae not her seat

And center in the breast.”

Burns: Epistle to Davie, v.

“Needless was written law, where none oppress;

The law of man was written in his breast.”

Dryden: Ovid.

(ii) As the repository of secrets.

† To make a clean breast:

(a) To confess all that one has kept secret about anything that he has been charged with, or which, without being accused, he still feels constrained to reveal; to make a full and ingenuous confession.

“ . . . to make a clean breast of it before she died.”—Scott: St. Ronan's Well, ch. xxxviii.

(b) To tell one's mind bluntly or without circumlocution.

“To speak truth I'm wearying to mak a clean breast wi' him and to tell him o' his unnaturality to his own doohter.”—The Entail, iii. 101.

(2) Of remoter resemblances to the human breast: The surface of the earth, or anything similar.

“Upon the breast of new-created earth

Man walk'd.”

Wordsworth: Excursion, bk. iv.

“So have ye seen the fowler chase,

O'er Grasmere's clear unruffled breast.”

Wordsworth: Blind Highland Boy.

II. Technically:

1. Machinery, &c.:

(1) The part of an object against which the breast pushes in some machines, such as the breast-drill, breast-plow, &c.

(2) A bush connected with a small shaft or spindle.

2. Agric., &c.: The forward part of a plow's mold-board.

3. Metal., &c.: The front of a furnace.

4. Sheet-iron Ware: As applied to milk-cans, coffee and tea pots, and similar articles, this word denotes the bulging or rounded top which intervenes between the lid or cover and the cylindrical portion which forms the body of the vessel.

5. Vehicles: The middle, swell, or bulge of a nave or hub.

6. Hydraul.: The curved wall up to which the floats of a water-wheel work, and which prevents, as far as possible, the waste of water.

7. Carp.: The lower side of a hand-rail, a rafter, the rib of a dome or of a beam.

8. Architecture:

(1) That portion of a wall between the window and the floor.

(2) That portion of a chimney between the flues and the apartment.

9. Mining: The face of a coal-seam at which a miner is working.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to the breast in any of the foregoing senses. (See the subjoined compounds.)

breast-band, s.

Saddlery: A band passing across the breast of a draught animal, and to which the traces or tugs are attached. It is a substitute for a collar.

breast-beam, s.

1. Shipwrighting: A beam at the break of a quarter deck or fore-castle.

2. Weaving: The cloth-beam of a loom.

3. Railroad Engineering: The forward transverse beam of a locomotive.

breast-beating, s. The act or practice of beating the breast. (Lit. & fig.)

“ . . . breast-beating, brow-beating (against walls), lion-bellows of blasphemy and the like, stampings, smittings, breakages of furniture, if not arson itself?”—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. vi.

breast-board, s.

Rope-making: A loaded sled to which are attached the end yarns at the foot of the walk. As the yarns are twisted into a strand they become shorter and draw the sled toward the head of the walk, the load on the sled maintaining the necessary tension. The yarns are usually shortened one-third by the twisting, and lose about thirty per cent. in so doing. The twist is, however, necessary, to give the requisite rigidity, to prevent the fibers sliding on each other, and to partially exclude wet. The addition of tar increases the power of excluding water.

breast-bundle, brest-bundel, s. A girdle or band for the breast.

“Whether foryete shal the . . . womman spouse of hir breast-bundel.”—Wycklyffe: Jer. ii. 32.

breast-casket, s.

Naut.: The largest and longest caskets, i. e., a sort of strings placed in the middle of the yard. [CASKET.]

breast-chain, s.

Saddlery: A chain reaching between the hame-rings, its loop passing through the ring of the neck-yoke, to support the tongue. In carriage-harness the hame is destitute of the rings, and the strap is passed around the lower part of the collar. [NECK-YOKE.]

breast-collar, s.

Harness: A pulling strap which passes around the breast of the horse; a substitute for a collar, which encircles the neck and rests against the shoulders. In some cases the breast-strap is padded, and the two pieces are connected by a snap. A plate upon it holds the breast-rings and tug-buckle pieces.

breast-deep, a. Sunk so deeply that water, snow, earth, or whatever else the person is in, reaches as high as his breast.

“Seth him breast-deep in earth, and famish him;

There let him stand, and rave and cry for food.”

Shakesp.: Titus Andron., v. 3.

breast-drill, s.

Metal-working: A drill-stock operated by a crank and bevel-gearing, and having a piece against which the workman bears his breast when engaged in drilling.

breast-fast, s. [BREASTFAST.]

breast-harness, s.

Saddlery: A horse-gear arranged to pull by a band in front of the breast, instead of a collar.

breast-height, s.

Fortif.: The interior slope of a parapet.

breast-high, a. So high as to reach the breast of a person in it. (Used of a wall, &c.) Corresponds to BREAST-DEEP (q. v.).

“The river itself gave way unto her, so that she was straight breast-high.”—Sidney.

“Lay madam Partlet basking in the sun,

Breast-high in sand.” Dryden: Fables.

breast-hook, s. [BREASTHOOK.]

breast-knees, s. Timbers placed in the forward part of a vessel across the stem to unite the bows on each side. (Stormonth.) breast-line, s. The rope connecting the pontoons of a military bridge in a straight direction.

breast-locks, s. pl. The part of the mane of a lion or other animal hanging down from the breast.

“And as a lyon sculking all in night,

"... and at the same time open, as it were, a window to the outer world through which an occasional breath of every day English sentiment might flutter the self-absorption of university life."—London Times, Nov. 17, 1877.

II. Technically:

1. Physiol.: For details regarding the organic machine on the action of which breathing depends, see LUNGS. For the process of breathing itself see RESPIRATION. From 350 to 400 cubic feet of air are drawn into the lungs in 24 hours. The air expired is different, both in volume and composition, from that which was respired. Each hour an adult man takes in 450 to 550 grains of oxygen, and emits in the same period about 632 grains of carbonic acid, about 45 to 50 grains of nitrogen, and 9,720 grains of watery vapor. Hence a continued supply of fresh air, laden with oxygen, is needful to maintain life. For the want of it, out of 146 prisoners shut up in the "Black Hole" of Calcutta, which was not a hole at all but only a room too small for its occupants, 123 perished in eight hours, as did 260 out of 300 Russian prisoners confined in a cave after the battle of Austerlitz. [AIR.]

2. Music: The signs to mark where breath is to be taken are—* ✓. (Grove.)

"Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
 With bated breath, and whispering humbleness."
Shakesp.: Mer. of Venice, i. 3.

6. Breath of Life: The soul.

"Yet one doubt
 Pursues me [Adam] still, lest all I cannot die:
 Lest that pure breath of life, the spirit of man
 Which God inspired, cannot together perish
 With this corporeal clod."
Milton: Par. Lost, x. 782-791.

7. To take one's breath (lit. or fig.): To pause, to recover one's self.

8. To catch one's breath. To prevent one from breathing freely.

breath'-lëss-nëss, s. [Eng. breath; -less; -ness.] The state of being breathless, or out of breath.

"Methinks I hear the soldiers and busie officers when they were rolling that other weighty stone (for such we probably conceive), to the mouth of the vault with much toil and sweat and breathlessness, how they bragged of the sureness of the place."—Bp. Hall: Works, ii. 276.

*breath'-ý, a. [Eng. breath; -y.] Full of air or wind, windy.

"Lightning is less flamy and less breathy."—Swan. Speculum Mundi (1635), p. 186.

brecc'-i-à (cc as çh), s. [Ital. breccia; Fr. brèche=(1) a breach, (2) a fragment.]

1. Building, Comm., &c.: A kind of marble composed of a mass of angular fragments, closely cemented together in such a manner that when broken they form brèches or notches.

2. Geol.: The word has now a more extended signification. It signifies a rock composed of angular as distinguished from rounded fragments united by a cement of lime, oxide of iron, &c. The fragments of course are derived from pre-existing rocks. Presumably these are not far off, for if the fragments had been transported from a distance by water, their angles would have been rounded off. There are quartzite breccias, ferruginous breccias, volcanic breccias, bone breccias, &c.

"... faced with barricades of limestone rock, intermixed with huge masses of breccia, or pebbles imbedded in some softer substance which has hardened around them like mortar."—Scott: Rob Roy, ch. xxxii.

"I noticed that the smaller streams in the Pampas were paved with a breccia of bones."—Darwin: Voyage round the World (ed. 1870), ch. vii., p. 134.

"Brede or squarenesse, croissure."—Palsgrave.

bredir, s. pl. [BROTHER.] Brethren.

bredis, s. pl. [Jamieson says this is certainly the same with in brede as used by Chaucer, which Tyrwhitt renders abroad. Thus brondyn in bredis is "branched out." But it appears more probable that the MS. has been mis-read, and that we should read broudyn in bredis=embroidered, as with braids.] [BREDE (1), s.]

"The birth that the ground bure was brondyn in brìogais; Ir. brög.] [BROGUE.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) A garment worn to cover the lower part of the body; drawers. (Originally used of the dress of women as well as of men, but now confined to the latter.)

(a) Very rarely in the singular.

"The women weren breech as well as men."—Maunde-ville: Voyage, p. 250.

"That you might still have worn the petticoat,

And ne'er had stol'n the breech from Lancaster."

Shakesp.: 3 Henry VI., v. 5.

(b) Now only in this sense in the plural.

" . . . and shall have linen breeches upon their loins;
they shall not gird themselves with anything that causeth sweat."—Ezek. xlv. 18.

"Young, royal Tarry Breeks."—Burns: A Dream.

" . . . stoles, albs; chlamydes, togas, Chinese silks, Afghaan shawls, trunk-hose, leather breeches, Celtic phil-ibegs . . ."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. i., ch. v.

¶ The Jewish priests wore linen breeches (Exod. xxviii. 42, xxxix. 28; Levit. xvi. 4). In classical times breeches were worn only by the non-Roman and non-Grecian nations.

(2) Sing.: The hinder part of the person covered by the trousers. (Hayward.)

2. Figuratively:

(1) The hinder part of anything. [II. 1.]

(2) Used, in the sense of authority, rule, superiority, especially in the phrases to have the breeches, to wear the breeches.

"Terentia being a most cruel woman, and wearing her husband's breeches."—North: Plutarch (Cicero).

"Come, Lopez, let's give our wives the breeches, too,

For they will have 'em."

Beaum. & Fletcher: Women Pleased, v. 3.

II. Technically:

1. Fire-arms and Ordnance: The rear portion of a gun; the portion behind the chamber.

2. Shipbuilding: The outer angle of a knee-timber; the inner angle is the throat.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to a breech in any of the senses given under A.

breech-band, s.

Harness: The same as breeching, s. (2) (q. v.).

breech-belt, *breche-belt, *brek-belt, s. A belt or girdle used to sustain the breeches; a waist-belt.

"His breche-belt all tobrast."

Huntlyng of the Hare, 205.

breech-block, s. A movable piece at the breech of a breech-loading gun, which is withdrawn for the insertion of a cartridge and closed before firing, to receive the impact of the recoil. [FIRE-ARM.]

breech-girdle, *brech-gurdel, *brech-gerdel, breck-girdille, *breg-gurdel, *brich-gerdel, brek-gurdel, *bre-gurdel, *bri-gurdel, *brygyr-dyll, s. [Eng. breech; O. Eng. brech, breche, &c.=breech, and girdle.]

1. The same as breech-belt.

"Small trees that ben non hyere than a mannes breckgirdille."—Maunde-ville, p. 50.

"Jeremie's brech-gerdel rote de beside the weter."— Ayenbite of Inwit (ed. Morris), p. 205.

2. The waist, the middle. [BREGGURDEL.]

breech-loader, s. A fire-arm in which the charge is introduced at the rear instead of at the muzzle.

The use of breechloaders goes back to the sixteenth century;
indeed, it is probable that that form of arm is about as old as the muzzle-loader. In the modern form, however,
it is of quite recent introduction.

Breech of a Breech-loading Shot-gun.

"Another and still more important lesson of the present war is found in the use at once of intrenchments and breech-loaders."—London Times, Dec. 12, 1877.

breech-loading, a. Made to be loaded at the breech.

Breech-loading gun or cannon: A gun or cannon made to be loaded at the breech instead of the muzzle.

Breech-loading rifle: A rifle made to be loaded at the breech.

Fire-arms: A plug screwed into the rear end of a barrel, forming the bottom of the charge-chamber.
Otherwise called a breech-plug or breech-screw.

breech-screw, s.

Fire-arms: The plug which closes the rear end of the bore of a fire-arm barrel. The parts are known as the plug, the face, the tenon, the tang, and the tang-screw hole.

Fire-arms: The hinder sight of a gun. In conjunction with the front sight it serves to aim the gun at an object. It is graduated to degrees and fractions, their length on the scale being equal to the tangents of an arc having a radius equal to the distance between the front and rear sights. The front sight is merely a short piece of metal screwed into the gun, usually at the muzzle, but sometimes between the trunnions, or on one of the rimbases, with its upper edge parallel to the bore of the gun.
The rear sight may be detached, having a circular base fitting the base of the gun, or may slide through a slotted lug, and be retained at any given height by a set screw. The breech-sight, the tangent scale and the pendulum are merely different forms of this device.

breech-wrench, s.

Fire-arms: A wrench used in turning out the breech-pin of a fire-arm.

brēēġh (or as brīġh), v. t. [From breech, s. (q. v.)]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. To put into breeches.
2. To whip upon the breech.

II. Technically:

Of a gun: To fit with a breech; to fasten with breeching (q. v.).

brēēġhed (or as brīġhed) (Eng.), brēeked (Scotch). [BREECH, v.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

- (1) Wearing, or having on breeches.

"But I can perceive that the idea, romantic as it is, is strongly felt by the blue-coated, red-breeched creatures, who are wanted just now to reinforce the maimed armies of the Emperor."—London Daily News, September 3, 1870.

- (2) Put into breeches; hence grown up.

- (3) Whipped on the breech. (Beaum. & Fl.)

*2. Figuratively: Covered, hidden.

Steep'd in the colors of their trade, their daggers Unmannerly breech'd with gore."
Shakesp.: Macbeth, ii. 3.

II. Technically:

Of guns: Having a breech.

brēēġh-ēr, s. [Breech; -er.]

1. One who breeches.
2. One who flogs on the breech.

"Fesseur. A whipper, scourger, breecher."—Cotgrave.

breeches (pron. brīġh-ēs), s. pl. [BREECH.]

breeches-bible, s. A name given to a bible printed in 1579, and so called from the reading of Genesis iii. 7: "they sowed figge-tree-leaves together and made themselves breeches." As a matter of fact, this bible has no more distinctive right to the name than Wyckliffe's version, in which the same words are also found.

brēēġh-īng (or as brīġh-īng), pr. par., a. & s. [BREECH, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language: The act of whipping on the breech; the state of being so whipped.

"Memorandum, that I owe Anamnestes a breeching."—Brewer: Lingua, iii. 1.

II. Technically:

1. Ordnance: A rope secured by a thimble to the breeching-loop of a ship's gun, and attached by its ends to ring-bolts on each side of the port-hole, serving to limit the recoil of the gun when fired. The breeching-loop occupies the place of the ordinary cascabel.

2. Harness: The portion which comes behind the buttocks of a horse, and enables him to hold back the vehicle in descending a hill. It is called also a breech-band.

3. Furnace: A bifurcated smoke-pipe of a furnace or heater.

breeching-hook, s.

Vehicles: A loop or hook on the shaft of a carriage for the attachment of the strap of the breeching, by which the horse bears backwardly against the load in descending a hill.

breeching-loop, s.

Ordnance: The loop of the cascabel in ships' guns, through which the breeching goes to prevent the recoil.

brēēd, brede, breden, bredyn, breede, v. t. & i. [A. S. brēdan = to nourish, keep warm; Dut. broeden = to brood, broeijen = (1) to hatch, incubate, (2) to brew; O. H. "Heaven rain grace

On that which breeds between them."

Shakesp.: Tempest, iii. 1.

¶ To breed of, to breid of, to braid of:

1. To resemble.

"Ye breed of the miller's dog, ye lick your mouth or the poke be ope."—Ferguson: Scotch Proverbs, p. 35.

"Ye breed o' the gowk, . . ." Ibid., p. 35.

2. To appear, to be manifest.

"Sum schames to ask as braids of me."

Dunbar: Bannatyne Poems, p. 46, st. 3. (Jamieson.)

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between the verbs to breed and to engender:—"To breed is to bring into existence by a slow operation; to engender is to be the author or prime cause of existence. So, in the metaphorical sense, frequent quarrels are apt to breed hatred and animosity. . . . Whatever breeds acts gradually; whatever engenders produces immediately as cause and effect. Uncleaness breeds diseases of the body; want of occupation breeds those of the mind; playing at chance games engenders a love of money." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) breed-bate, s. A quarrelsome person, one who causes quarrels and disturbances.

"No tell-tale, nor no breed-bate."—Shakesp.: Merry Wives, i. 4.

brēze (1), *brize, s. [Fr. brise; Sp. brisa; Port. briza = the northeast wind; Ital. brezza = a cold wind.]

1. Lit.: A gentle gale, a light wind.

"We find that these hottest regions of the world, seated under the equinoctial line, or near it, are so refreshed with a daily gale of easterly wind, which the Spaniards call breeze, that doth ever more blow stronger in the heat of the day."—Raleigh.

"His voice was steady, low, and deep,
Like distant waves when breezes sleep."
Scott: Rokeby, vi. 19.

†2. Fig.: A slight quarrel or disturbance.

† Crabb thus distinguishes between breeze, gale, blast, gust, storm, tempest, and hurricane. All these words express the action of the wind in different degrees and under different circumstances: "A breeze is gentle; a gale is brisk, but steady; we have breezes in a calm summer's day; the mariner has favorable gales which keep the sails on the stretch. A blast is impetuous: the exhalations of a trumpet, the breath of bellows, the sweep of a violent wind, are blasts. A gust is sudden and vehement: gusts of wind are sometimes so violent as to sweep everything before them while they last. Storm, tempest, and hurricane include other particulars besides wind. A storm throws the whole atmosphere into commotion; it is a war of the elements, in which wind, rain, and the like, conspire to disturb the heavens. Tempest is a species of storm which has also thunder and lightning to add to the confusion. Hurricane is a species of storm which exceeds all the rest in violence and duration. . . ."—(Crabb: Eng. Synon.) brēze (2), s. [O. Fr. brese; Fr. braise = cinders.]

2. Among the ancient Irish, an hereditary judge. "As for example, in the case of murder, the Brehon that is their judge, will compound between the murderer and the friends of the party murdered."—Spenser: State of Ireland.

"The Brehons were, in North Britain and Ireland, the judges appointed by authority to determine, on stated times, all the controversies which happened within their respective districts. Their courts were usually held on the side of a hill, where they were seated on green banks of earth. The hills were called mute-hills. The office belonged to certain families, and was transmitted, like every other inheritance, from father to son. Their stated salaries were farms of considerable value. By the Brehon law, even the most atrocious offenders were not punished with death, imprisonment or exile; but were obliged to pay a fine called Eric. The eleventh or twelfth part of this fine fell to the judge's share; the remainder belonged partly to the King or Superior of the land, and partly to the person injured; or, if killed, to his relations."—Dr. Macpherson: Critical Dissertations, D. 13.

B. As adj.: Pertaining or relating to the laws or magistrates mentioned under A.

*brew-et, s. [BREWIS.]

brew'-īng (Eng.), brew'-īn' (Scotch) (ew as ū), pr. par., a. & s. [BREW, v.]

A. & B. As present participle and participial adjective: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"He saw mischief was brewin'."

Burns: The Ordination.

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) In the same sense as II. 1 (q. v.).

(2) The quantity of malt liquor brewed at one operation.

"A brewing of new beer, set by old beer, maketh it work again."—Bacon.

*2. Fig.: The act of mixing different things together.

"I am not able to avouch anything for certainty, such a brewing and sophistication of them they make."—Hotland.

II. Technically:

1. Liquor manufacture: The art of making malt liquor. This term is also applied to the first operation of the distiller, viz., the extracting of the wort from grain, malt, or any other saccharine substance.

(1) History: According to Herodotus, the Egyptians made wine from barley. The Greeks learned the process from them, and, according to Xenophon, used a barley-wine. Tacitus informs us that beer was a common beverage among the Germans, and Pliny adds that it was so among all the nations of Western Europe.

(2) Modern methods of operation: There are six operations in brewing, viz., grinding or crushing, mashing, boiling, cooling, fermenting and cleansing.

(i) Grinding: The malt or corn is bruised or crushed by smooth metal rollers, and left in a heap for a few days before brewing, by which it becomes mellow, and is more easily exhausted by the water in the mashing.

(ii) Mashing: The crushed or bruised malt is now thrown into the mash-tub, and water added at a temperature of from 158° F. to 172° F. After a maceration of three or four hours, assisted during the first half hour by constant stirring, the liquid portion is strained off through finely-perforated plates in the bottom of the mash-tub, into the underback, and pumped into the copper. In mashing, the aim of the brewer is, not only to dissolve out the sugar in the malt, but also to cause the so-called diastase contained in the malt to act on the starch and convert it into sugar. If the heat of the mash-liquor stands below 140° F., the diastase will be inactive; if above 185° F., it is apt to be destroyed. A medium temperature of 165° F. is found to be the most suitable for mashing.

(iii) Boiling: As soon as all the wort is collected in the copper, the hops are added, and the whole boiled for about three hours. The object of boiling is to coagulate and precipitate the excess of albumen present, and to extract the aromatic oil and bitter of the hop.

(iv) Cooling: In order to prevent as much as possible the formation of acid, it is necessary to cool the wort as quickly as possible. This is done by exposing it to a current of air in large shallow vessel, or running it over refrigerating pipes.

(v) Fermenting or fermentation: As soon as the temperature has fallen to 60° F. the wort is run into the fermenting vats, and yeast added. In about four hours fermentation begins, and is allowed to continue for forty-eight hours, when the yeast is skimmed off and the beer run into large casks. Fermentation is the most delicate operation of the brewer, as on it chiefly depends the quality and condition of the beer. His aim is, not to decompose all the sugar in the wort, but to leave a sufficiency to give body to the beer and keep up the evolution of carbonic acid gas.

(vi) Cleansing: The ordinary practice in cleansing is to run the liquid from the fermenting vats into a series of casks placed with their bung-holes slightly inclined, so that the yeast still generated may pass over into vessels placed to receive it. The object of cleansing is to check the action of the yeast. When sugar is used it is dissolved in the copper. The finished beer varies in specific gravity from 1,002° to 1,030°, and contains from four to twenty-four per cent. of proof spirit, together with a sugar, called maltose, dextrine, coloring matter, and various salts.

2. Naut.: A collection of dark clouds portending a storm.

brewing-tub, s. A tub for brewing.

"... we shall then have the loan of his cider-press and brewing-tubs for nothing."—Goldsmith: Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xvii.

*brewis, *brouwys, *browesse, *brewet, s. [A. S. brīw, brīwes = brewis, the small pieces of meat in broth, pottage, frumenty (Somner, Bosworth); (N. H.) Ger. brei = pottage; M. H. Ger. brī, brīe; O. H. Ger. pri, prio; from A. S. brēowan = to brew.] [BREW, BREE, BROSE.]

1. Broth; liquor in which beef and vegetables have been boiled. (Eng. & Scotch.)

"What an ocean of brewis shall I swim in!"

Beaumont & Fletcher: Dioclesian.

"... there bubbled on the aforesaid bickering fire a huge pot, or rather caldron, steaming with beef and brewis; while before it revolved two spits."—Scott: Bride of Lammermoor, ch. xii.

2. A piece of bread soaked in boiling fat pottage, made of salted meat.

*brew'-stēr, *breū'-stēr, *brēwe-stere (ew as ū), s. [Eng. brew; and O. Eng. fem. term. -ster.]

1. Feminine: A female brewer.

"Bakers, Bochers, and Brewsters monye."

Piers Plowman: Vis., Prol. 98.

2. A brewer of the male sex, or without reference to sex at all. (Trench.)

¶ It is still used in the north of England.

brew'-stēr-ite (ew as ū), s. [Named after Sir David Brewster, the eminent natural philosopher, with suff. -ite (Min.) (q. v.).]

Min.: A monoclinic mineral with a hardness of 4.5-5; a specific gravity of 2.432-2.453; a luster pearly on some faces and on others vitreous, a white color and weak double refraction. Composition: Silica, 53.04-54.32; alumina, 15.25-17.49; sesquioxide of iron, 0.08-0.29; baryta, 6.05-6.80; strontium, 8.32-9.99; lime, 0.80-1.35, and water, 12.58-14.73. It is found at Strontian, in Argyshire, Scotland; at the Giant's Causeway, in Antrim, Ireland; in the Isle of Staffa, and on the continent of Europe. (Dana.)

brew-stēr-lī'-nīte, brew-stēr'-line, brew-stō'-line (ew as ū), s. [Named after Sir David Brewster. The second part may be from Lat. linea = line, or Gr. linon = flax, a flaxen end, a thread; suffix -ite (Min.) (q. v.).]

bōil, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, çell, chorus, çhin, bench; go, gem; thin, thīs; sin, aș; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f. -cian, -tian = shan. -tīon, -sion = shūn; -tīon, -șion = zhūn. -tious, -cious, -sious = shūs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bēl, dēl.

Min.: A new fluid of unknown composition, first found by Sir David Brewster, and occurring in the cavities of various crystals in Scotland, Brazil and Australia.

brēx'-ī-ā, s. [From Gr. brexis=a wetting, brechō=to wet, possibly because the fine large leaves afford one a protection against rain.]

Bot.: A genus of plants, the typical one of the order Brexiaceæ (Brexiads). The species are Madagascar trees, commonly called by gardeners Theophrastas. They have firm, spiny, or entire leaves, and axillary green flowers.

brēx'-ī-ā-çē-æ, s. pl. [From Mod. Lat. brexia (q. v.), fem. pl. adjectival suffix -aceæ.]

Bot.: Brexiads, an order of plants placed by Lindley under his Forty-third or Saxifragal Alliance. He distinguishes them as Saxifragal Exogens, with consolidated styles and many-leaved calyx, alternate leaves, and non-albumen.

brēx'-ī-ads, s. pl. [Mod. Lat. brexia (q. v.), and Eng. pl. suffix -ads.]

Bot.: The English name of the order Brexiaceæ (q. v.).

brēy, v. t. [A. S. bregean, bregan=to frighten.] To terrify.

"Bot a serpent all wgly,
That bregd thame all standand thare-by."
Wyntoun, vi. 4, 36.

breyde, v. t. [BRAID (1), v.] (Prompt. Parv.)

brey-dyn, v. t. [BRAID (1), v.] To upbraid. (Prompt. Parv.)

breyel, s. [BROTHEL.] (Prompt. Parv.)

breyfe, s. [BREVE, s.]

breythe, v. i. [BRAID (1), v.] To rush.

"And breythed uppe into his brayn and blemyst his mynde."

Ear. Eng. Allit. Poems (ed. Morris); Cleanness, 1,421.

brēz'-ī-līn, s. [BRAZILIN.] The same as BRAZILIN (q. v.).

brī'-ar, s. & a. [BRIER.]

briar-rose, s. [BRIER-ROSE.]

briar-tooth, s. [BRIER-TOOTH.]

†Bri-ār'-ē-an, a. [From Lat. Briareus=pertaining to Briareus, and Eng. suffix -an.]

1. Class. Myth.: Pertaining to Briareus, a son of Coelus and Tellus, or of Æther and Tellus, who had a hundred hands and fifty heads.

2. Ord. Lang.: Having a hundred hands.

bribe, *brȳbe, s. [O. Fr. bribe=a present, gift.]

*1. Robbery, plunder.

"Brybery, or brybe. Manticulum."—Prompt. Parv.

2. A reward or consideration of any kind given or offered to any one corruptly, with a view to influence his judgment or conduct.

"Glo. Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?"

York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,

And, being protector, stay'd the soldiers' pay;

By means whereof, his highness hath lost France."

Shakesp.: 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1.

†bribe-devouring, a. Eager for bribes.

bribe-pander, s. One who procures bribes.

†bribe-worthy, a. Worthy of a bribe; worth bribing.

bribe, *brȳbe, *brȳ-bȳn, v. t. & i. [O. Fr. briber.]

A. Transitive:

*1. To plunder, pillage, rob, or steal.

"Ther is no thief without a lowke
That helpeth hym to wasten and to sowke
Of that he brybe kan, or borwe may."

Chaucer: C. T., 4,417.

"Brybyn. Manticulo, latrocinor."—Prompt. Parv.

2. To give or offer to any person a reward or consideration of any kind, with a view to influence his judgment or conduct; to hire for a corrupt purpose; to secure a vote by illegal or corrupt means.

"Or would it be possible to bribe a juryman or two to starve out the rest."—Macaulay's Hist. Eng., ch. xxii.

3. To influence or bring over to one's side in any way.

"How pow'rful are chaste vows! the wind and tide
You bryb'd to combat on the English side."

Dryden.

B. Intrans.: To offer or give bribes.

"The bard may supplicate, but cannot bribe."

Prologue to Good-natured Man.

†bribe'-a-ble, brī'-ba-ble, a. [Eng. bribe; and able.] Capable of being bribed; open to a bribe.

"Can any one imagine a more dangerous and more bribable class of electors?"—Edwards: Polish Captivity, c. 9.

†brī'-bēe, s. [BRIBE, s.] One who receives a bribe.

"... were scheduled as bribees without being examined."—The Boston Election. Times, March 30, 1876.

†bribe'-lēss, a. [Eng. bribe, and suff. -less.] Free from bribes; incapable of being bribed.

brīb'-en, v. t. or i. [BRIBE, v.]

brīb'-ēr, *brīb-our, *bryb-our, *bryb-oure, *brey-bowre, s. [O. Fr. bribeur=a beggar, a scavenger, also a greedy devourer; briber=to beg; and this from bribe=(1) a lump of bread given to a beggar (Cotgr.), (2) a present, a gift; bribe (anc. MSS.)=bullet; from Welsh briw=a morsel, a fragment.]

*1. A thief, robber, plunderer.

"Alle othere in bataille beeth yholde brybours, Pilours and pyke-herneys, in eche parshe a-corsede."
Langland: P. Plowman, xxiii. 263.

"Who saveth a thefe when the rope is knet,
With some false turne the bribeur will him quitee."
Lydgate.

*2. A low, beggarly fellow.

"That pedder brybour, that scheip-keipar,
He tellis thame ilk ane caik by caik."

Bannatyne Poems, p. 171, st. 7.

3. One who offers or gives bribes.

*4. He who or that which in any way influences or tries to influence corruptly or wrongfully.

"Affection is still a briber of the judgment; and it is hard for a man to admit a reason against the thing he loves; or to confess the force of an argument against an interest."—South.

brīb'-ēr-ȳ, *brī'-bēr-īe, *brȳb'-ēr-ȳ, s. [Eng. bribe; -ry.]

I. Ordinary Language:

*1. Robbery, theft, plunder. [See quotation under BRIBE, s., 1.]

2. The act or practice of bribing, or of giving or offering bribes; the act of receiving bribes.

"For the congregation of hypocrites shall be desolate, and fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery."—Job xv. 34.

II. Law: In this country the term bribery is applied to an attempt to corruptly influence, by means of offers of reward, the course of legislation, the result of an election, the verdict of a jury, the decision of a magistrate, &c. It is not necessary to constitute an indictable offense that the bribe be accepted. The tender of the bribe is the essence of the crime. If a bribe be offered a witness to swear falsely the crime is not bribery, but is merged into subornation of perjury. The penalty for bribery is fine or imprisonment, or both.

brīb'-īng, pr. par., a. & s. [BRIBE, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: (See the verb.)

C. As substantive: The act of giving or offering a bribe, bribery.

bric-à-brac, s. & a. [Fr.]

A. As subst.: Fancy ware, curiosities, knick-knacks.

"I've no taste for bric-à-brac."—Cornhill Mag., January, 1867, p. 117.

B. As adj.: Pertaining to or containing curiosities, knick-knacks, &c.

"The old china, the lace and glass, were all for sale. In fact, the chief show house in Brock was a bric-à-brac shop. Finally, she took us into a room and introduced us to 'Mign Vader.'"—Daily Telegraph, January 5, 1866.

briche, *bruche, s. [BREACH, s.] A breach, rupture.

briche, *bryche, a. [A. S. brice, bryce=fragile.] Weak.

"Now ys Pers bycome bryche,
That er was bothe stoute and ryche."

Robert of Brunne.

bricht, *brycht (ch guttural), a. & s. [BRIGHT.]

† Used substantively for a young woman, strictly as conveying the idea of beauty.

"Wallace hyr saw, as he his eyne can cast,
The prent off luff him punyeit at the last,
So asprely, through bewte off that brycht,
With gret wness in presence bid he mycht."

Wallace, v. 607, MS.

brick (1), *brique, s. & a. [O. Fr. brique=(1) a fragment, (2) a brick; O. Dut. brick, bricke=a fragment, bit; brick, brick=a tile, brick. Compare A. S. brice, bryce=brittle, a breaking, from brecan=to break.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) A mass of clay and sand dried in the sun, tempered, and burned in a kiln, made in a rectangular shape, and used in building. [II. 2.] Bricks well made, well dried and well burned are almost impervious to the changes of the weather, and the subtle influences of the atmosphere. There are bricks in some houses and public buildings in Europe, still in good condition, that are seven hundred years old.

"Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick, as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves."—Exod. v. 7.

"Not a brick was made but some man had to think of the making of that brick."—Carlyle: Heroes and Hero-worship, lect. v.

(2) Bricks collectively, as a material.

"Augustus was accustomed to boast that he had found his capital of brick, and that he had left it of marble."—Gibbon: Decline and Fall, i. 44.

2. Figuratively:

(1) A species of loaf, so called from its shape somewhat resembling a brick. It is applied to bread of different sizes; as, a penny brick, a three-penny brick, a quarter brick, i. e. a quarter loaf.

"... a penny brick, on which we made a comfortable meal."—Smollet: Roderick Random.

(2) A good fellow. (Colloquial.)

"He's a dear little brick."—Thackeray.

(3) In this country the gold and silver of the mines are made up in the form of bricks, and are known as gold or silver bricks.

(4) Brick in his hat, used of a person intoxicated.

II. Technically:

1. Arch.: A molded and burned block of tempered clay. The word is also applied to the block in its previous conditions as a molded plastic mass, and as a dried block in which the water hygrometrically combined with the clay is driven off. When this condition is accepted as a finality, the block so dried is an adobe. The burning of the previously dried brick drives off the chemically combined water, and forever changes the character of the mass. An adobe may become re-saturated with water, and resume its plasticity; a brick may become rotten and disintegrated, but not plastic. Air-brick is an iron grating the size of a brick, or a perforated brick, let into a wall to allow the passage of air. Arch-brick usually means the hard-burned, partially vitrified brick from the arches of the brick-clamp in which the fire is made and maintained. A brick made voussoir-shaped is known as a compass-brick. A capping-brick is one for the upper course of a wall; clinker, a brick from an arch of the clamp, so named from the sharp glassy sound when struck; a coping-brick, one for a coping course on a wall; feather-edged brick, of prismatic form, for arches, vaults, niches, etc.; fire-brick, made of intractable material, so as to resist fusion in furnaces and kilns; hollow-brick, with openings for ventilation; stocks, a name given to the best class of bricks, and also locally to peculiar varieties, as gray-stocks, red-stocks, etc.; pressed brick, another name for that class of stock brick, in which the process of manufacture has been to largely reduce the bulk of the plastic material by hydraulic pressure before burning, giving to the completed brick a smooth surface and great density of body. Pecking, place, sandal, semel brick, are local terms applied to imperfectly burned or refuse brick. Bricks vitrified by excessive heat are termed burr-bricks or burrs.

2. Hist.: Bricks were manufactured at a remote period of antiquity by the Egyptians, the Babylonians, the Assyrians, &c., and some of them, being inscribed with written characters, have been of priceless value in conveying historic facts to the present age. About A.D. 44, bricks were made in England by the Romans, and in A.D. 886 by the Anglo-Saxons under King Alfred. Under Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth the manufacture greatly flourished. The size was regulated by Charles I. in 1625.

3. Her.: A charge resembling a billet, but showing its thickness in perspective.

B. As adjective: Pertaining to bricks or brickwork.

brick-ax, s.

Bricklaying: An ax with two ends, which are presented like chisels. It is used in chopping off the soffits of bricks to the saw-kerfs, which have been previously made in the brick to the required depth, in order to prevent the brick from spalling.

brick-bat, s. [BRICKBAT.]

brick-built, a. Built or constructed of brick.

"Yet, enter'd in the brick-built town, he try'd."

Dryden: Juv. Sat., 10.

brick-burner, s. One whose trade or occupation it is to superintend the burning of bricks in the kiln.

brick-clamp, s. A stack of bricks in order for burning.

brick-clay, s.

1. Ord. Lang.: Clay used for making brick.

"I observed it in pits wrought for tile and brick-clay."—Woodward.

Bricks.

Brick-ax.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camēl, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marine; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rūle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

2. Geol.: The term brick-clay occurs frequently in descriptions of geological formations. Brick-clays abound in almost every locality in which the land formation has been subject to glacial action. The deposit of brick-clays have many modifying characteristics, due to their impregnation, to a greater or less extent, with foreign metallic elements. In this country the ferruginous clays are the most esteemed, owing to the fine color of the brick manufactured of them.

A. As subst.: The color of brick. [B.]

B. As adj.: Dull scarlet mixed with gray.

brick-dryer, s. An oven in which green bricks are dried, so as to fit them for building up in clamps or kilns for burning. A series of drying-chambers are separated from each other by iron folding-doors, through which chambers a railroad track is laid. Under one end of the structure is a furnace, and hot air of increasing degrees of temperature is introduced successively into the separate chambers. (Knight.) brick-dust, brickdust, s. Dust made or arising from pounded bricks. (Lit. & fig.)

"This ingenious author, being thus sharp set, got together a convenient quantity of brickdust, and disposed of it into several papers."—Spectator.

brick-earth, s.

1. Ordinary Language: Earth used for brick-making.

2. Geology:

(1) The term is sometimes used in the singular.

"From the sub-aërial conditions under which the brick-earth was formed."—Q. J. Geol. Soc., xiii. 63.

(2) Pl. (brick-earths): A term specially used of two beds or series of beds, the Upper and the Lower Brick-earths. The names were given by Mr. Searles Wood, jr. The latter are especially interesting. They exist in England, near London, at Ilford, Gray's Thurrock, Crayford, Erith, and Wickham. Besides freshwater and terrestrial shells, &c., they contain no fewer than twenty-four species of mammals, among others the Wolf (Canis lupus), the Beaver (Castor fiber), and the Wild Cat (Felis catus); a fossil horse (Equus fossilis), a Hyæna (Hyæna spelæa); and, yet more remarkable, Elephas antiquus, primigenius and priscus; Rhinoceros tichorhinus, leptorhinus and megarhinus, and Hipopotamus major. Prof. Boyd Dawkins considers them Pleistocene and Pre-glacial. He believes that in a descending order the following is the sequence of the several beds: (1) Post-glacial deposits, climate severe, but gradually becoming temperate; (2) Glacial deposits, climate severe; (3) Lower Brick-earths of Thames Valley, climate comparatively temperate; (4) Forest bed of Norfolk, climate temperate. (Q. J. Geol. Soc., xxiii. (1867) 91-109.) Mr. Searles Wood, jr., on some points differs from Prof. Boyd Dawkins. (Ibid., 394-417.)

brick-elevator, s. An apparatus for raising materials used in construction. Usually endless chains are carried over wheels above and below, and the material is carried up on boxes supported by frames attached to the chains.

brick-field, s. A field in which bricks are made. "The newer deposits of the brick-field."—Q. J. Geol. Soc., xix. 304.

brick-furnace, s. A furnace for burning bricks. In Hoffmann's annular brick-furnace there is a central chimney and removable divisions for separating the annulus into different chambers. These are filled and emptied through doors. The chambers being charged with brick, heat is applied to one chamber, and the volatile material thence resulting is led through the next one, so as to heat and dry the bricks in the next in series. The bricks in chamber one being burned, the fire is applied to number two, and so on to the end.

brick-kiln, s. [BRICKKILN.]

brick-layer, s. [BRICKLAYER.]

brick-machine, s. A machine for making bricks. Many such machines exist diverse in type from each other, patents for their construction, in the aggregate amounting to hundreds, having been taken out in the United States or in England.

brick-maker, s. [BRICKMAKER.]

brick-making, s. The operations of brick-making may be said to consist in: Preparing the brick-earth, tempering, molding, drying, and burning. The qualities of bricks may be thus enumerated: Soundness, that is, freedom from cracks and flaws; hardness, to enable them to withstand pressure and strain; regularity of shape and size, to enable them to occupy their proper place in the course; infusibility, in those intended for furnace-work. Fire-bricks are made from a compound of silica and alumina, and the clay owes its refractory quality to the absence of lime, magnesium, potash, and metallic oxides, which act as fluxes. Hollow bricks are made for purposes of warming, ventilating, and removing moisture from the wall. In some cases the hollows form flues, or shafts for ventilation, or discharge of dust from the upper stories. In other cases the hollows have no mechanical function other than to form air-chambers for warmth, as it is well known that an imprisoned body of air is a very poor conductor of heat. (Knight.)

"... a dark grayish-blue clay worked for brick-making."—Q. J. Geol. Soc., xxxiv. 826.

brick-mason, s. A bricklayer. (Ogilvie.) brick-mold, s. A box in which clay for bricks is molded into shape. It is sometimes of wood lined with iron or brass; sometimes it is made of sheet-iron in four pieces, riveted together at the angles, and strengthened with wood at the sides only.

brick-molder, s. One who molds bricks.

brick-nogging, s. & a.

A. As substantive:

Building: Brick and stud work. [B.]

B. As adjective: Consisting of brick and stud work.

"[A brick-nogging wall or partition is one in which the spaces between the timbers or scantling are filled up with brick laid in mortar. In a brick-nogging partition the wooden portions are called nogging-pieces."

brick-pit, s. A pit from which bricks are dug.

"The brick-pit at Lexden is situated . . ."—Q. J. Geol. Soc., xix. (1863).

brick-press, s. A kind of brick-machine, which effects its object by compressing the bricks into shape. [BRICK-MACHINE.]

brick-red, s. Of a reddish color, like that of bricks.

brick-tea, subst. The larger leaves and young shoots of the tea-plant first softened by steam and then molded into a brick-shaped mass. In Asia brick-tea is employed to facilitate commerce, articles being valued by bricks of tea.

brick-trimmer, s. [TRIMMER.]

Arch.: A brick arch abutting against a wooden trimmer in front of a fire-place, to guard against accidents by fire.

brick-trowel, s. [TROWEL.] A trowel used by bricklayers.

brick-truck, s. A truck with wide tires to travel over the flat surface of the brick-yard in moving brick from the hack to the kiln.

brick-wall, s. & a.

A. As subst.: A wall of brick.

B. As adj.: Consisting of such a wall.

"And they, that never pass their brick-wall bounds, To range the fields, and treat their lungs with air."—Couper: The Task, bk. iv.

brick-work, s.

Bricklaying: The regulation brick is $8\frac{1}{2} \times 4 \times 2\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Of such, one foot of brick-work ($1\frac{1}{2}$ bricks thick) contains 17 bricks. One foot superficial of Flemish bond requires 8 bricks. One cubic foot comprises 125 bricks, or 95 pounds of sand, or 135 pounds of clay, or 126 pounds of common earth. One great ton weight (2,240 pounds) comprises 330 bricks, or $23\frac{1}{2}$ cubic feet of sand, or $17\frac{1}{2}$ of clay, or 18 of earth. One cubic foot of brick-work weighs 120 pounds; 1 rod of fresh brick-work ($11\frac{1}{2}$ cubic yards) weighs 35,840 pounds. (Knight.) brick-yard, s. A "yard" or inclosure, or simply a place, in which bricks are made.

brick (2), s. [Corruption of break, s. (?)]

Brick of land: A division, a portion distinguished from other portions.

"... the bricks of land vnderwritten, viz., that brick of land lyand north and south . . ."—Acts Parl., Jas. V., vii., p. 516. (Jamieson.) brick, v. t. [From brick, s. (q. v.)]

Building:

1. To lay or construct with bricks.

"The sexton comes to know where he is to be laid, and whether his grave is to be plain or bricked."—Swift.

2. To imitate or counterfeit a brick-wall by smearing a wall with red ocher, cutting divisions in it, and filling the latter with plaster.

brick-bāt, s. [From Eng. brick, and bat (1), s.] A broken piece of brick.

"Earthen bottles, filled with hot water, do provoke in bed a sweat more daintily than brickbats hot."—Bacon.

brick-ing, s. [BRICK, s.] The imitation of brick-work on a plastered or stuccoed surface.

brick-kiln, *bricke-kill, s. [Eng. brick, and kiln.] A chamber in which green bricks are loosely stacked, with spaces between them for the passage of the heat, and in which they are burned by fires placed either in arched furnaces under the floor of the kiln, or in fire-holes placed in the side walls.

"Draw thee waters for the siege: fortify thy strong-holds, goe into clay, and tread the mortar: make strong the brickekill."—Nahum iii. 14. (Old Bible.)

"Moses took the ashes of the furnace, perhaps the brick-kiln in which the wretched slaves were laboring, cast them into the air, and where they fell the skin broke out in boils."—Milman: Hist. of Jews, vol. i., bk. ii., p. 83.

brick-lāy-ēr, s. [Eng. brick, and layer.] A man whose trade it is to lay or set bricks.

"In the course of a hundred and twenty years, the daily earnings of the bricklayer have risen from half a crown to four and tenpence."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iii.

bricklayer's-hammer, s.

Bricklaying: A tool having a hammer-head and a sharpened peen, forming an ax for dressing bricks to shape.

bricklayer's-hoist, s. A winch and tackle for lifting bricks and mortar in building.

bricklayer's-itch, s.

Med.: A disease to which bricklayers are subject, caused by the particles of brick-dust entering the skin and producing great irritation.

bricklayer's-laborer, s. A laborer who assists the bricklayer by supplying him with bricks, mortar, &c.

bricklayer's-trowel, s. [BRICK-TROWEL.]

brick-lāy-ing, s. [Eng. brick, and laying.] The art or trade of building with bricks, or of laying or setting bricks.

"Who is to judge how much cotton-spinning, or distributing goods from the stores, or bricklaying, or chimney-sweeping is equivalent to so much plowing?"—J. S. Mill: Political Economy (ed. 1849), vol. i., bk. ii., ch. i., § 3, p. 246.

"[The implements of the bricklayer are a trowel, for spreading mortar and breaking bricks when a piece smaller than a whole brick is required; a hammer, for making openings in the brick-work and for driving or dividing bricks, for which purposes one end is formed like a common hammer, and the other is broad and flattened, somewhat after the manner of an ax; the plumb-rule, made generally of wood, having a longitudinal opening down its middle and a plummet suspended from its upper end, for carrying walls up perpendicularly; the level, consisting of a long horizontal arm, having a perpendicular branch carrying a vertical arm from which a plummet is suspended; a large square, for laying out the sides of a building at right angles; a rod, usually five or ten feet long, for measuring lengths; compasses, for traversing arches and vaults; a line and line-pins, for keeping the courses straight and level as the work progresses; and a hod, for carrying bricks and mortar to the workman. In this country of late the labor of brick-laying has been greatly lessened. Bricks and mortar are borne from tier to tier of the building, not on the shoulders of laborers, but by portable elevators.

brīc'-kle-ness, s. [O. Eng. brickle; -ness.] The quality of being brickle or fragile, brittleness.

brīc'-lŷ, *brīc'-kle, *bro-kel, *bro-kle, *bru-kel, *bru-kle, a. [O. Dut. brokel=fragile, brittle; A.S. brice, bryce=brittle, brecan=to break.]

1. Lit.: Brittle, fragile, easily broken.

"The parke oke is the softest, and far more spalt and brickle than the hedge oke."—Harrison: England, p. 221.

"But th' Altare, on the which this Image staid, Was, O great pitie! built of brickle clay."—Spenser: Ruins of Time, 498-9.

2. Fig.: Fickle, variable, uncertain, unsteady.

"The brickle and variable doctrine of John Calvin in his institutions."—Stapleton: Fortress of the Faith (1665), f. 24, b.

"... when I think how I am to fend for ye now in these brickly times."—Scott: Old Mortality, ch. vii.

brīc'-mā-kēr, s. [Eng. brick; maker.] One whose trade it is to make bricks.

"They are common in clayspits; but the brickmakers pick them out of the clay."—Woodward.

brīc'-māk-ing, a. & s. [BRICK-MAKING.]

brickmaking-machine, s. A machine for making bricks. [BRICK-MACHINE.]

brīc'-nōg-gīng, s. [BRICK-NOGGING.]

brīc'-wōrk, s. [BRICK-WORK.]

brīc'-ŷ, a. [Eng. brick; -y.] Full of or composed of bricks. (Cotgrave.) brī-cōl', *brī-cōl'e, s. [Fr. bricole.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.:

(1) In the same sense as II. 1 (q. v.).
(2) Anything laid across a stream, gap, or hollow, to afford means of passing over.

"Thai drou it [a tree] then and mad a brig Ouer a litel burn to lig." Cursor Mundi, 8,945.

2. Fig.: Anything similar to a literal bridge. [II. 1.]

¶ (1) Of the nose: The upper bony part of the nose.

"The raising gently the bridge of the nose, doth prevent the deformity of a saddle nose."—Bacon.

(2) To break down a bridge behind one:

Mil.: To do as described with the view of preventing an enemy from following. It has the additional effect of preventing one's self from easily retreating again across the water. (Lit. & fig.)

"He had broken down all the bridges behind him. He had been so false to one side that he must of necessity be true to the other."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xx.

II. Technically:

1. Arch.: A structure consisting of an arch or series of arches supporting a roadway above it, designed to unite the two banks of a river or the two sides of an open space.

(1) History of bridges: Bridges seem to have existed in China from a period of considerable antiquity. The word bridge does not occur in the authorized version of the Bible. Temporary bridges, for military purposes, were constructed before permanent structures for the convenience of the inhabitants were erected. The former were often of boats. Thus, Cyrus constructed such bridges about 536 B. C., Darius Hystaspes about 490, and Xerxes about 480 B. C. Bridges of stone or brick seem to have been first used by the Romans; there were none erected in Greece till after the Roman conquest. The first Roman bridge is said to have been one spanning the Tiber between the Janiculum and the Aventine Mountain, built by or under Ancus Marcius. Now they are universal in properly-civilized countries, though in countries of imperfect civilization even yet they are few. In India they are not numerous, and most of those which exist have been erected since the occupation of the country by the British.

Following is a list of the notable bridges of the world:

Trajan's magnificent bridge over the Danube, 4,770 feet in length, built A. D. 115.

London Bridge. One existed at the end of the tenth century. One built of wood, 1014. A stone bridge, by Peter of Colechurch, begun 1176, was finished 1209. The new London Bridge is constructed of granite, from the designs of L. Rennie; it was commenced in 1824, and completed in about seven years, at a cost of $7,290,000.

The bridge at Burton, over the Trent, was formerly the longest bridge in England, being 1,545 feet. It is now partly removed. Built in the twelfth century.

The Bridge of the Holy Trinity, at Florence, Italy, was built in 1569. It is 322 feet long, constructed of white marble, and stands unrivaled as a work of art.

The Rialto, at Venice, is said to have been built from the designs of Michelangelo. It is a single marble arch, 98½ feet long, and was completed in 1591.

The Bridge of Sighs, at Venice, over which condemned prisoners were transported from the hall of judgment to the place of execution, was built in 1589.

Brooklyn Bridge, the largest suspension bridge in the world, was commenced, under the direction of J. Roebling, in 1870, and completed in about thirteen years. It is 3,475 feet long, and 135 feet high. The cost of building was nearly $15,000,000.

The Cantilever Bridge over the Niagara is built almost entirely of steel. Its length is 810 feet, the total weight is 3,000 tons, and the cost was $900,000.

The Niagara Suspension Bridge was built by Roebling, in 1852-55, at a cost of $400,000. It is 245 feet above water, 821 feet long, and its strength is estimated at 1,200 tons.

The bridge at Havre de Grace, over the Susquehanna, is 3,271 feet long, and is divided into twelve wooden spans, resting on granite piers.

Coalbrookdale Bridge, England, was the first cast-iron bridge. It was built over the Severn in 1779.

The Menai Bridge, forming part of the line of road between London and Holyhead, having an interval of 560 feet between the supporting points of suspension. It rests on seven stone arches, 52½ feet from one another, and is 100 feet above the level of the sea. Designed and executed by Telford, 1825.

The Tubular Suspension Bridge, over the Menai Strait, forming part of Chester and Holyhead Railway, consists of two lines of tubes, each 1,513 feet long, supported on three towers, besides the shore abutments. One hundred feet above the sea. Weight, 10,540 tons. Commenced 1846, finished 1850.

fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāll, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camēl, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marīne; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

Tay Bridge, 10,612 feet, of 85 spans, across the Tay, 90 feet above the sea. Begun 1871, completed 1877. Cost $10,750,000. Destroyed by a gale 1879. New Bridge.

Clifton Suspension Bridge, at Bristol, England, has a span of 705 feet at a height of 245 feet above the water. The carriageway is 20 feet wide, and the footways 5½ feet wide. Cost $500,000.

Forth Bridge, over the Firth of Forth, near Edinburgh. Total length 2,765 yards (1½ miles). There are two cantilever spans of 1,710 feet each (the longest in the world). Fifty-one thousand tons of steel. Extreme height above meanwater level, over 370 feet. About 25 acres of surface to be painted. Cost about $15,000,000. Commenced April, 1883; opened by Prince of Wales, March 4, 1890.

High Bridge, New York, by which Croton Aqueduct is carried across Harlem River, is of granite throughout. It is 1,450 feet long, 114 feet high, and supported on 14 massive piers.

Victoria Bridge, which spans the St. Lawrence at Montreal, Canada. It is tubular, and 9,194 feet, or nearly two miles, long. The massive tube through which the railway track is laid is 22 feet high and 16 feet wide. It was formally opened in 1860. The total cost of the bridge was $6,300,000.

The St. Louis Bridge, across the Mississippi River, from St. Louis, Mo., to East St. Louis, Ill., is regarded as one of the greatest triumphs of American engineering. It was designed by James B. Eads, and was begun in 1869, and completed in 1874. It consists of three spans, resting on four piers. The piers are composed of granite and limestone, and rest on the bed-rock of the river, to which they were sunk through the sand, from 90 to 120 feet, by the use of wrought-iron caissons and atmospheric pressure. The center spans 520 feet, and the side ones are each 500 feet in the clear; each of them is formed of four ribbed arches, made of cast steel. The rise of the arches is 60 feet, sufficiently high to permit the passage of steamboats at all stages of the water. The bridge is built with two platforms, the lower one containing a double car-track, and the upper one two 8-foot footways and a carriageway 30 feet in width. It passes over a viaduct of five arches (27 feet span each) into Washington Ave., St. Louis, where the lower roadway runs into a tunnel 4,800 feet long, which passes under a large part of the city. The total cost of the bridge and tunnel was over $10,000,000.

Besides the bridges here enumerated, there are many other notable specimens of bridge architecture in this country, the Mississippi River alone being crossed many times from its source to its mouth by magnificent structures.

Over the Ohio river, at the cities of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Louisville, Ky., there are several fine specimens of bridge building—one at the former city for a long time ranking as first among suspension bridges in this country. The other bridges at these points are railway and passenger bridges, of the pier-and-girder or pier-and-truss-arch type.

(2) Construction and parts of a modern bridge: A bridge is generally made of wood, of iron, of stone, or of brick. The extreme supports of the arches at the two ends are called abutments or abutments; the solid parts between the arches piers, and the fences on the sides of the road or pathway parapets.

(3) Different kinds of bridges: Among these may be mentioned a basculer-bridge, boat-bridge or a bridge of boats, bowstring-bridge, chain-bridge, draw-bridge, floating-bridge, flying-bridge, foot-bridge, furnace-bridge, girder-bridge, lattice-bridge, pontoon-bridge, raft-bridge, rope-bridge, skew-bridge, suspension-bridge, swing-bridge, swivel-bridge, trestle-bridge, truss-bridge, tubular bridge, viaduct, weigh-bridge. (See these words.)

2. Shipbuilding: A partial deck extending from side to side of a vessel amidships. It is common in steam vessels, affording a convenient station for the officer in command, and extends over the space between the paddle-boxes. It is also known as the hurricane-deck or bridge-deck.

3. Mining: The platform or staging by which ore, limestone, fuel, &c., are conveyed to the mouth of a smelting-furnace.

4. Metallurgy, furnaces, boilers, &c.:

(1) A lower vertical partition at the back of the grate space of a furnace. [WATER-BRIDGE, HANGING-BRIDGE.]

(2) The middle part of the fire-bars in a marine boiler, on either side of which the fires are banked. (Admiral Smyth.)

(3) The low wall of division between the fuel-chamber and hearth of a reverberatory furnace.

(4) The wall at the end of the hearth toward the stack compelling the caloric current in puddling to ascend and then descend toward the foot of the stack.

5. Music: A thin wooden bar placed beneath the strings of a musical instrument to elevate them above the sounding-board and to terminate at one end their vibrating portion. The tone of an instrument is largely influenced by the position of the bridge.

6. Ordnance: The pieces of timber between the transoms of a gun-carriage.

7. Horology: A piece raised in the middle and fastened at both ends to the watch-plate, and forming a bearing for one or more pivots. When supported at one end it is a cock.

8. Engraving: A board resting on end-cleats, used by an engraver to span the plate on which he is working, to support the hand clear of the plate.

9. Electricity: A device used for measuring the resistance of an element to an electric circuit. [ELECTRIC-BRIDGE.]

B. As adjective: Pertaining to a bridge in any of the foregoing senses.

bridge-board, s.

1. Carp.: A notched board on which the ends of the steps (technically the treads and risers) of wooden stairs are fastened. It is called also a notch-board.

2. The bridge of a steamboat. [A., II. 2.]

bridge-equipage, s. An "equipage" designed to accompany armies in the field and provide them with materials whence to construct bridges across any rivers which may impede them in their progress.

bridge-gutter, bridged gutter, s. A gutter formed of boards covered with lead and supported on bearers.

bridge-head, s.

Fortif.: A work commanding the extremity of a bridge nearest to the enemy; a tête de pont.

bridge-islet, s. A portion of land which becomes insular at high-water.

bridge-master, s. One who has charge of a bridge, a bridge-warden.

bridge-over, a.

Carpent.: A term showing that certain parts lie across and rest on others; as, common joists, bridge-over binding-joists, &c.

bridge-pile, s.

Civil Engineering: A pile driven to support a timber of a bridge.

bridge-rail, s.

Railroading: A railroad-rail having an arched tread and lateral foot flanges. It has been adopted by nearly all well-equipped modern railways. It is laid on a longitudinal sleeper in cross-ties. Felt saturated in pitch, or its equivalent, is placed beneath the rail over the sleeper, and gives a certain resiliency to the track. The other rails are known as edge-rails and foot-rails (q. v.). (Knight.)

bridge-stone, s.

1. Masonry: A stone, laid from the pavement to the entrance-door of a house, spanning a sunken area.

2. Road-making: A flat stone serving as a bridge across a gutter or narrow area.

bridge-train, s. A military bridge composed of portable boats. The same as bridge-equipage, or pontoon-bridge or train (q. v.). A bridge-equipment or pontoon-train, consisting of a military bridge composed of portable boats.

bridge-tree, s.

Milling: The beam which supports the spindle of the runner in a grinding-mill. On the upper surface of the bridge-tree is the socket of the spindle. The bridge-tree is capable of vertical adjustment, to vary the relative distance of the grinding-surfaces, by moving the runner toward or from the bedstone. The adjusting device is called a lighter-screw. (Knight.)

bridge-truss, s. A structure of thrust and tension pieces, forming a skeleton beam, in a viaduct. It has several varieties: the lattice, the arched truss (or combination of arch and truss), the deck-truss, in which the road-bed is on the straight stringers. (Knight.)

bridge-ward (1), s. [Eng. bridge, and ward (2), s.]

Locksmithing: The main ward of a key, usually in the plane of rotation.

Quest. of Troy (ed. Donaldson and Panton), 814.

Bright's-disease, s. [Named after Dr. Bright.] [ALBUMINURIA.] A granular disease of the cortical portion of the kidneys, so called because it was first diagnostically described by Dr. Robert Bright, an English physician. It is first emphasized by the secretion of urine containing a large amount of albumen, and this symptom is followed by other complications, usually in rapid sequence. The most commonly observed pathological effects are dropsy, uræmia, and in some cases petrification of the kidneys and ureters. It is uniformly fatal, no remedies known seeming to have more than a slightly palliative effect upon it. It is aggravated, and indeed, in the opinion of some physicians, induced by indulgence in alcoholic drinks, and similar errors of diet.

Why seek we brightness from the years to come?"
Prior.

2. Sharpness, acuteness.

"The brightness of his parts, the solidity of his judgment, and the candor and generosity of his temper, distinguished him in an age of great politeness."—Prior.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between brightness, luster, splendor, and brilliancy: "Brightness is the generic, the rest are specific terms: there cannot be luster, splendor, and brilliancy without brightness; but there may be brightness where these do not exist. These terms rise in sense; luster rises on brightness, splendor on luster, and brilliancy on splendor. Brightness and luster are applied properly to natural lights; splendor and brilliancy have been more commonly applied to that which is artificial: there is always more or less brightness in the sun or moon; there is an occasional luster in all the heavenly bodies when they shine in their unclouded brightness; there is splendor in the eruptions of flame from a volcano or an immense conflagration; there is brilliancy in a collection of diamonds. There may be both splendor and brilliancy in an illumination: the splendor arises from the mass and richness of light; the brilliancy from the variety and brightness of the lights and colors. Brightness may be obscured, luster may be tarnished, splendor and brilliancy diminished. The analogy is closely preserved in the figurative application. Brightness attaches to the moral character of men in ordinary cases, luster attaches to extraordinary instances of virtue and greatness, splendor and brilliancy attach to the achievements of men. Our Savior is strikingly represented to us as the brightness of His Father's glory, and the express image of His person. The humanity of the English in the hour of conquest adds a luster to their victories which are either splendid or brilliant, according to the number and nature of the circumstances which render them remarkable." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) bright'-some (gh silent), a. [Eng. bright, and suff. -some (q. v.)] Bright, clear.

Chem.: Also called Tribromaldehyde $\text{CBr}_3\cdot\text{CO}\cdot\text{H}$, obtained by the action of dry Bromine on absolute alcohol. It is a liquid boiling at 172°, and unites with water to form a solid hydrate which melts at 43°. It is decomposed by alkalies into formic acid $\text{HCO}\cdot\text{OH}$, and bromoform CHBr_3 . It unites with hydrocyanic acid, forming $\text{CBr}_3\cdot\text{CH}\cdot\text{CN}$, which, by the action of acids, is converted into tribromolactic acid $\text{CBr}_3\cdot\text{CH}(\text{OH})\cdot\text{CO}\cdot\text{OH}$. By the action of nitric acid on Bromal it yields tribromacetic acid $\text{CBr}_3\cdot\text{CO}\cdot\text{OH}$.

brō-mān-il, s. [From Eng. brom(ine); and Port. anil=indigo.]

Chem.: An aromatic compound called also Tetra-bromoquinone $\text{C}_6\text{Br}_4\text{O}_2$ or

It is prepared by heating one part of phenol $\text{C}_6\text{H}_5(\text{OH})$ with ten parts of bromine, three parts of iodine and water to 100°. It crystallizes in golden yellow scales, which are sparingly soluble in carbon disulphide.

brōm-ār-gŷr-ite, s. [In Ger. bromargyrit; Eng., &c., brom(ine); Gr. argyros=silver; and suff. -ite (Min.) (q.v.).]

brome-grass, s.

Bot.: The English book-name for the genus Bromus (q.v.).

brō-mēl'-ī-a, s. [In Fr. bromélie. Named after Bromelius, who published a Gothic flora.]

Bot.: A genus of plants, the typical one of the order Bromeliaceæ (q.v.).

brō-mēl'-ī-ā'-çē-æ, s. pl. [From Lat., &c., bromelia (q.v.); and Lat. fem. pl. adjectival suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: Bromelworts, an order of endogenous plants, placed by Dr. Lindley under his Narcissal Alliance. The calyx is sometimes herbaceous-looking, but sometimes colored. Petals, three, colored; stamina, six or more; ovary, three-celled, many-seeded, as is the fruit, which is capsular or succulent. The stem is wanting or, if present, very short. Sometimes it consists of fibrous roots, consolidated round a slender center with rigid channeled leaves spiny at the edge or point. The fruit is sometimes eatable. Lindley estimated the known species at 170, all American. They have been introduced into Africa, the East Indies, and elsewhere. The well-known pineapple is the Bromelia Ananas. [ANANAS, PINEAPPLE.] Ropes are made in Brazil from another species of the same genus. All the species of Bromeliaceæ can exist without contact with the earth; they are therefore suspended in South America in houses, or hung to the balustrades of balconies, whence they diffuse fragrance abroad.

brō-mēl-wōrts, s. pl. [From Lat. bromelia, and Eng. wort.]

Bot.: The English name given by Lindley to the natural order Bromeliaceæ.

brōm-hŷ-drīng, s. pl. [From Eng., &c., brom(ine); hydr(ate); and suff. -in (Chem.) (q.v.).]

Chem.: Haloid ethers formed by replacing the 1, 2 or 3 (OH) radicals in the triatomic alcohol glycerin by Br. Monobromhydrin $\text{CH}_2\text{Br}\cdot\text{CH}(\text{OH})\cdot\text{CH}_2(\text{OH})$, an oily liquid boiling at 130°, obtained by the action of HBr on glycerin $\text{C}_3\text{H}_5(\text{OH})_3$. Symmetrical Dibromhydrin, $\text{CH}_2\text{Br}\cdot\text{CH}(\text{OH})\cdot\text{CH}_2\text{Br}$, a liquid boiling at 219°, obtained by the action of bromine on monobromhydrin. Unsymmetrical Dibromhydrin $\text{CH}_2\text{Br}\cdot\text{CHBr}\cdot\text{CH}_2(\text{OH})$, boiling at 212° by the action of bromine on allyl alcohol ($\text{CH}_2=\text{CH}\cdot\text{CH}_2(\text{OH})$). Tribromhydrin or Allyltribromide $\text{CH}_2\text{Br}\cdot\text{CHBr}\cdot\text{CH}_2\text{Br}$, a crystalline substance melting at 16°, and boiling at 220°; it is obtained by the action of excess of bromine on allyl iodide. [CHLORHYDRINS.] brō-mīc, a. [From Eng., &c., brom(ine), and suff. -ic.] Pertaining to bromine; having bromine in its composition.

bromic acid, s.

Chem.: HBrO_3 . A monobasic acid, forming salts called bromates. When bromine is dissolved in caustic potash a mixture of bromide and bromate of potassium are obtained, which can be separated by crystallization, $3\text{Br}_2+6\text{KHO}=5\text{KBr}+\text{KBrO}_3+3\text{H}_2\text{O}$. Free bromic acid can be prepared by passing chlorine into bromine water, $\text{Br}_2+\text{Cl}_2+\text{H}_2\text{O}=2\text{HBrO}_3+10\text{HCl}$. The acid is best obtained by decomposing potassium bromate by argentic nitrate acid acting on the resulting argentic bromate by bromine, $5\text{AgBrO}_3 + 3\text{Br}_2 + 3\text{H}_2\text{O} = 5\text{AgBr} + 6\text{HBrO}_3$. Bromic acid is a strongly-acid liquid, reddening and then bleaching litmus paper. On concentration at 100° it decomposes into bromine and oxygen. It is decomposed by sulphur dioxide (SO_2), sulphide of hydrogen (H_2S), and by hydrobromic acid (HBr). Bromates are with difficulty soluble in water, and are decomposed on heating into oxygen and bromides.

bromic silver, s.

Min.: The same as Bromyrite and Bromargyrite (q. v.).

brō'-mīde, s. [Eng. brom(ine); -ide (Chem.) (q. v.).]

Chem.: A combination of bromine with a metal or a radical. Bromides are soluble in water, except silver and mercurous bromides; lead bromide is very slightly soluble. They are detected in analysis by the following reactions: Argentic nitrate gives a yellowish precipitate of AgBr , insoluble in dilute nitric acid, and soluble in strong ammonia. Chlorine liberates bromine, and, if the liquid is shaken up with ether, a yellow ethereal solution floats on the liquid. Heated with sulphuric acid and MnO_2 , bromides yield vapors of Br , which turns starch yellow.

"... water and its chlormated and brominated congeners."—Fownes: Chem. (ed. 1873), p. 944.

brō'-mīne, s. [From Gr. brōmos=a stink; Mod. Lat. bromium.]

1. Chem.: A non-metallic element. Symbol, Br ; atomic weight, 80. Bromine was discovered in 1826 by Balard in the salts obtained by the evaporation of sea-water. Bromine is liberated from the sodium and magnesium salts by the action of free chlorine, and is separated by ether, which dissolves the bromine. This red-colored solution is removed, saturated with potash, evaporated, and heated to redness, and the bromide of potassium is heated with manganese dioxide and sulphuric acid. The bromine is liberated in the form of a deep-red vapor, which condenses into a dark, reddish-black liquid. Specific gravity, 2.97; it boils at 63° ; its vapor density is 5.54 times that of air. It has an irritating smell, and when inhaled is poisonous. It dissolves in thirty parts of water, and the solution has weak bleaching properties. Bromine and hydrogen do not unite in the sunlight, but do when they are passed through a red-hot porcelain tube, forming hydrobromic acid (HBr), which is also obtained by the action of phosphorus and water on bromine. It is a colorless, fuming gas, which liquefies at 73° , very soluble in water. The concentrated solution contains 47.8 per cent. of HBr , it boils at 126° , and has powerful acid properties; it neutralizes bases, forming bromides and water. Hypobromous acid, HBrO , is only known in solutions; it has bleaching properties. Bromine can displace chlorine from its compounds with oxygen, while chlorine can liberate bromine from its compound with hydrogen. Free bromine turns starch yellow.

2. Pharm.: Bromine has been applied externally as a caustic, but rarely. Its chief official preparations are bromide of ammonium, useful in whooping-cough, infantile convulsions, and nervous diseases generally; and bromide of potassium, now very extensively used, especially in epilepsy, hysteria, delirium tremens, diseases of the throat and larynx, bronchocele [GOITER], enlarged spleen, hypertrophy of liver, fibroid tumors, &c. Also, as an antaphrodisiac, for sleeplessness, glandular swellings, and skin diseases. Its alterative powers are similar to but less than that of the iodides. Its preparation is the same as iodide of potassium, substituting an equivalent quantity of bromine for iodine— $6\text{KHO} + \text{Br}_6 = 5\text{KBr} + \text{KBrO}_3 + 3\text{H}_2\text{O}$. It has a pungent saline taste, no odor, and occurs in colorless cubic crystals, closely resembling the iodide. As a hypnotic its usefulness is much increased by combining it with morphia or chloral hydrate.

Med.: Dilatation of the bronchi. [BRONCHI.] The most important forms are:—(1) The general or uniform, with cylindrical or fusiform dilatation of a tube, or several tubes; (2) The saccular, or ampullary [AMPUL], in which there is abrupt dilatation of a tube at a particular point or points. The breath and sputum are fetid, and general health impaired, followed by lung consolidation, ulceration, abscess, or gangrene. Death may result from exhaustion, but recovery may take place by formation of a sort of fibrous capsule, or from penetration of the pleura and thoracic walls and discharge of the contents outward. Bronchiectasis is not uncommon, and is of interest and importance on account of its alliance with some forms of phthisis.

brōn'-chī-tīs, s. [Gr. brōngchia=the bronchia, or brōnghos=the bronchus or windpipe (q. v.), and Gr. itis (Med.), denoting inflammation.]

Med.: Inflammation of the air-tubes leading to the pulmonary vesicles, accompanied by hoarseness, cough, increase of temperature, and soreness of the chest anteriorly. The natural mucous secretion is at first arrested, but increases afterward, and is altered in quality, becoming more corpuscular. Its forms are: (1) Acute bronchitis, (a) of the larger and medium-sized tubes; (b) capillary bronchitis, and bronchitis of the tubes generally—the peripneumonia notha of the older writers. (2) Chronic bronchitis. (3) Plastic bronchitis. (4) Mechanical bronchitis, such as knife-grinder's disease—carbonaceous bronchitis or black phthisis. (5) Bronchitis secondary to general diseases, such as measles or typhoid fever. (6) Bronchitis secondary to blood diseases. (7) Syphilitic bronchitis. All varieties are generally preceded by feverishness, but oftener by "a cold in the chest." The uneasy sensations begin about the region of the frontal sinuses, passing from the nasal mucous passages, trachea, and windpipe to the chest, with hoarseness, cough, and expectoration; but in capillary bronchitis the cough is dry and without expectoration. In acute cases the sputum is first thin, then opaque and tenacious, lastly purulent; the breathing is hurried and laborious, the pulse quickened, and the skin dry. The danger increases in proportion as the finer bronchial tubes become involved, and instead of the healthy respiratory sound we have sharp, chirping, whistling notes, varying from sonorous to sibilant. The sharp sound is most to be feared, as arising in the smaller tubes; the grave, sonorous notes originate in the larger tubes. Spitting of blood sometimes occurs, and in severe cases persons actually die suffocated from the immense quantity of mucous thrown out, obstructing the tubes and causing collapse of the vesicular structure of the lungs. The ratio of the respiration to the pulse is high, going up to 60 or even 70 in the minute, with a pulse-rate of 120 or 130. Chronic bronchitis, or bronchial catarrh, is extensively prevalent, especially among the aged, recurring once or twice a year in spring or autumn, or both, till it becomes more or less constant all the year round. For chronic bronchitis the resinous oils are the best remedies. Five drops of oil of Eucalyptus on a cube of sugar three or four times daily will do much to ameliorate the recurrent paroxysms. In acute attacks a physician had best be at once consulted.

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Literally:

(1) An alloy of copper and tin. [In the same sense as II. 1 (q. v.).]

"As monumental bronze unchanged his look."

Campbell: Gertrude of Wyoming, i. 23.

(2) A statue or a figure in relief cast in bronze.

"How little gives thee joy or pain:

A print, a bronze, a flow'r, a root,

A shell, a butterfly can do 't."

Prior.

" . . . old Roman and French bronzes, . . ."—London Times, September 9, 1876. Advt.

2. Figuratively:

(1) The color of bronze, brown. [BRONZED.]

(2) Brazen effrontery, impudence.

"Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henley stands Tuning his voice, and balancing his hands."

Pope: Dunciad, iii. 199.

II. Technically:

1. Metal., Archæol., & Hist.: An alloy composed of copper and tin, sometimes with a little zinc and lead.

(1) Archæol. & Hist.: Bronze was in use in ancient China, Egypt, Assyria, Europe and Mexico. The tin used in parts of the Eastern world was brought from Cornwall or from the peninsula of Malacca. [BRONZE AGE.]

(2) Characters, properties, and uses: Bronze, as already stated, is an alloy of copper and tin. It is harder and more fusible than copper itself. The proportions of the two constituents vary according to the purpose for which the alloy is produced. It oxidizes very slowly, even when the air is moist, which renders it well adapted for statues and similar works of art.

2. Cotton manufacture: One style of calico-printing peculiar rather from the character of its colors than from any specific novelty in treatment.

B. As adjective: Made of bronze, characterized by the presence of bronze in a literal or figurative sense.

bronze age, s.

1. Archæol.: The age of bronze, the second of three ages believed by MM. Nilsson, Steenstrup, Forchhammer, Thomsen, Worsæ, and other Danish archæologists, to have followed each other in the peninsula of Jutland and elsewhere in the following order: (1) The stone age, (2) the bronze age, and (3) the iron age. During the first stone, or sometimes bone, was used for weapons or implements, the working of metal being as yet unknown. Then weapons were made of bronze, the method of alloying the two metals having been discovered, but that of working in iron being undiscovered. Finally iron took the place of bronze. These views have been generally adopted by geologists and archæologists, though some believe an age of copper to have intervened between those of stone and bronze. The allegation that the use of stone came first; that of bronze next, and that of iron last is not inconsistent with the fact that all still exist contemporaneously in portions of the world.

During the age of bronze the oak was the dominant tree in Denmark, the Scotch-fir, now extinct in that country, having flourished during the earlier part of the stone age; while the beech was, and remains, the characteristic tree of the iron age. Lake-dwellings of the bronze period have been found in western and central Switzerland, and one has been discovered in the lake of Constance. Geologically even the stone age belongs only to the recent period. (Lubbock, Lyall, &c.)

Brownian motion, Brownian movement, s. A rapid whirling motion seen in minute particles of matter, whether vegetable or mineral. Its origin is obscure. It is sometimes called molecular motion.

"Filippi proved him wrong, and showed that the motion of the corpuscles was the well-known Brownian motion."—Tyndall: Frag. of Science, 3d ed., xi. 305.

brown-īe, brown-ỹ, broun-ỹ, s. [From Eng. brown, and suff. -y, as opp. to fair-ỹ.]

Scotch Mythology:

1. In Shetland: An imaginary being, to whom evil properties were attributed.

"Not above 40 or 50 years ago, almost every family had a Brouny or evil spirit so called, which served them, to whom they gave a sacrifice for his service."—Brand: Description, p. 112. (Jamieson.)

*2. In other parts of Scotland: A domestic spirit or goblin, meager, shaggy, and wild, till lately supposed to haunt many old houses, especially those attached to farms. He was the Robin Goodfellow of Scotland. In the night he helped the family, and particularly the servants, by doing many pieces of drudgery. If offered food or any other recompense for his services, he decamped and was seen no more. The diffusion of knowledge has been more potent in its operation, and the "brownie" may now be reckoned almost an extinct species. [BAWSY-BROWN.]

"All is bot gaistis, and elrische fantasis, Of brownyis and of bogillis full this buke,"

Doug.: Virgil, 158, 26.

Brown-ism, s. [From Robert Brown [1. Ch. Hist.], and Eng., &c., suffix -ism.]

1. Ch. Hist.: The scheme of church government formed by Robert Brown about A. D. 1581. He considered that each congregation of Christians should be self-governing, and should be exempt from the jurisdiction of Bishops or of Synods. He was in favor of the election by each congregation of a pastor, but allowed others than him to preach and exhort. Propagating these views in England he met with so much opposition that he removed to Holland, but ultimately he returned to England and conformed to the Established Church. His views, slightly modified by Robinson, are those of the Independents or Congregationalists. [CONGREGATIONALISM.]

"That schism would be the sorest schism to you; that would be Brownism and Anabaptism indeed."—Milton: Reason of Ch. Gov., B. 1.

2. Med.: The views of John Brown, founder of the medical system called after him Brunonian (q. v.).

Brown-ist, s. [From Robert Brown [BROWNIISM], and Eng., &c., suff. -ist.]

1. Ch. Hist.: A follower of Robert Brown, mentioned above. The Brownists soon became extinct in Holland and in England, but the Congregationalists, who hold similar views, are a flourishing sect.

Bot.: A genus of plants belonging to the order Xanthoxylaceæ (Xanthoxyls). The green parts of Brucea sumatrana are intensely bitter. B. antidysenterica contains a poisonous principle called Brucia (q. v.). The bark of another species is bitter, and has qualities like those of Quassia Simarouba. B. ferruginea is from Abyssinia.

bruche (1), s. [BROCHE, BROOCH.] (Morte Arthure, 3,256.)

bruche (2), s. [BREACH.]

brū'-chūs, s. [From Lat. bruchus; Gr. broukos or brouchos=a wingless locust, which the modern bruchus is not.]

Entom.: A genus of beetles belonging to the section Tetramera, and the family Rhynchophora or Curculionidæ. The antennæ are fourteen-jointed, and are filiform, serrate, or pectinated, not geniculated as in the more normal Curculionidæ. It contains small beetles which deposit their larvæ in the germs of leguminous plants, and when hatched devour their seed. Bruchus Pisi is destructive to the garden-pea.

brū'-cīne, brū'-cī-a, s. [In Ger. brucin. Named from the plant Brucea antidysenterica, from which it is derived.]

Chem.: (C₂₂H₂₆N₂O₄). An alkaloid found along with strychnine in nux vomica, also in false Angustura bark. Brucine is a tertiary base; it is more soluble in alcohol and water than strychnine, and is less bitter and poisonous. It forms crystalline salts, and turns a bright red color when moistened with nitric acid.

Brū'-cīte, s. [In Ger. brucit. Named after Dr. Bruce of New York, editor of the New American Mineralogical Journal.]

Mineralogy:

1. A rhombohedral translucent or subtranslucent sectile mineral, with broad, often tubular crystals, foliated, massive, or fibrous, with the fibers elastic. Hardness, 2½; specific gravity, 2.35-2.46. Luster between waxy and vitreous, but on a cleavage face pearly, and on the fibrous variety silky; colors white, grayish, bluish, or greenish. Composition: Magnesia, 62.89-70; oxide of iron, 0.5-63; water, 29.48-31.43, &c. Found in this country, at Sumaness in Unst, the most northern of the Shetland Isles, Scotland, in Sweden and in the Ural Mountains. Variety 1, foliated; var. 2 (Nemalite), fibrous. (Dana.)

*1. Gen.: The name given in the West Indies to any one who cured flesh or fish in the way described in the etymology. This was done continually by the men described under 2.

2. Spec.: An order of men, not quite pirates, yet with decidedly piratical tendencies, who, for nearly two hundred years, infested the Spanish main and the adjacent regions. A bull of Pope Alexander VI., issued in 1493, having granted to Spain all lands which might be discovered west of the Azores, the Spaniards thought that they possessed a monopoly of all countries in the New World, and that they had a right to seize, and even put to death, all interlopers into their wide domain. Enterprising mariners belonging to other nations, and especially those of England and France, naturally looked at the case from quite an opposite point of view, and considered themselves at liberty to push their fortunes within the prohibited regions. Being cruelly treated, when taken, by the Spaniards, their comrades made reprisals, and a state of war was established between the Spanish governments in the New World and the adventurers from the Old, which continued even when the nations from which they were drawn were at peace in Europe. The association of buccaneers began about 1524, and continued till after the English revolution of 1688, when the French attacked the English in the West Indies, and the buccaneers of the two countries, who had hitherto been friends, took different sides, and were separated forever. Thus weakened, they began to be suppressed between 1697 and 1701, and soon afterward ceased to exist, pirates of the normal type to a certain extent taking their place. The buccaneers were also called "filibustiers," or "filibusters"—a term which was revived some years ago in connection with the adventures of "General" Walker in Spanish America. [FILIBUSTER.]

5. The English name of a plant—the Lobelia coronopifolia, from the Cape of Good Hope.

B. As adj.: Resembling the horn of a buck, or resembling, in some particular or other, the more typical of the plants now described.

¶ Buckshorn plantain: [So called because the deeply-cut leaves somewhat resemble the horns of a buck.]

1. The ordinary English name of a plant—Plantago coronopus—which has linear pinnatifid or toothed leaves, and slender cylindrical spikes of flowers. It is not uncommon on sterile soils, especially near the sea.

2. A name for an allied plant—Plantago maritima, the Sea-side Plantago.

bück'-shōt, s. [From Eng. buck, and shot.] A kind of leaden shot larger than swan-shot. About 160 or 170 of them weigh a pound. They are especially designed to be used in hunting large game.

bück'-skin, s. & a. [Eng. buck; -skin.]

A. As substantive:

1. Ordinary Language:

(1) The skin of a buck.

(2) A native of Virginia. (Burns.)

2. Leather Manufact.: A kind of soft leather, generally yellow or grayish in color, prepared originally by treating deer-skins in a particular way, but now in general made from sheep-skins. This may be done by oil, or by a second method, in which the skins are "grained," "brained," and "smoked." (For details, see Knight's Dict. Mechan.)

B. As adj.: Made of the skin of a buck.

"... a pair of buckskin breeches."—Tatler, No. 42.

bück'-sōme, a. [BUXOM.]

bück'-sōme-nēss, s. [BUXOMNESS.]

bück'-stáll, *bück'-stál, s. [Eng. buck; and stall (q. v.)] A toil or net to take deer.

"Knit thy torne buck-stals with well-twisted threds, To be forsaken?" Brown: Brit. Past., ii., p. 108.

bück'-thorn, s. [Eng. buck, and thorn.]

Ord. Lang. & Bot.: The English name of Rhamnus, a genus of plants, the typical one of the order Rhamnaceæ (Rhamnads). The berries of the common species are black, nauseous, and, as the specific name Rhamnus catharticus imports, highly cathartic; they afford a yellow dye when unripe, as the bark of the shrub does a green one. They are sold as "French berries." The alder buckthorn, again, has dark purple purgative berries, which, in an unripe state, dye wool green and yellow, and when ripe bluish gray, blue, and green. The bark dyes yellow, and, with iron, black. Of the foreign species, the berries of the Rock-buckthorn, or Rhamnus saxatilis, are used to dye the Maroquin or Moroccan leather yellow, whilst the leaves of the Tea-buckthorn, R. thezans, are used by poor people in China as a substitute for tea. The species best known to the pharmacopœia of this country is the R. purshiana, otherwise called Cascara sagrada. [RHAMNUS.]

bück'-tôoth, *bück'-tâth, s. [Eng. buck; tooth.] Any tooth that juts out from the rest.

büc'-kâ, buch'-u, †buc'-û, s. [Caffre (?).] A South African name for several species of Barosma, especially B. crenata, crenulata, and serratifolia. They belong to the order Rutaceæ and the section Endiosmeæ. They have a powerful and usually offensive odor, and have been recommended as antispasmodics and diuretics.

bück'-üm-wood, s. [BUKKUM-WOOD.]

bück'-wheat, *böck'-wheat, s. & a. [From O. Eng. buck = beech, which the "mast" of its triangular seed resembles. In Dan. boghvede; Dut. bockweit; Ger. buchweizen.]

A. As substantive:

Ord. Lang. &

Bot.: A plant, the Polygonum Fagopyrum. In the United States its flour is extensively used as a breakfast dish in the shape of buckwheat cakes. Its native country is Asia, where it is extensively cultivated as a bread corn. In Europe its flowers are employed in the making of bread, cakes, etc., and its seeds for feeding horses and poultry.

būd (2), *būdde, s. [Apparently from Dut. bot = a bud, an eye, a shoot; butz = a core. [Fr. bouton = a button, a bud, a germ.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: In the same sense as II. 1 (q. v.).

"... every tree displays the same fact, for buds must be considered as individual plants."—Darwin: Voyage round the World, ix. 203.

2. Fig.: The germ of anything.

"Boys are, at best, but pretty buds unblown."
Cowper: Tirocinium.

II. Technically:

1. Bot. (A Bud or Leaf-bud): The germ of future leaves which arises from a node immediately above the base of a leaf, or, in other words, from the axil of a leaf. Any one appearing in a different situation is regarded as latent or adventitious. A bud consists of scales imbricated over each other, the outer series being the hardest and thickest, as being designed to afford protection to those within against the weather. In the center of the scales is a minute but all-important cellular axis, or growing point, whence the future development is to take place.

"Buds are distinguished into stem-buds (plumules), leaf-buds, and flower-buds."—Thomé: Struct. & Physiol. Bot. (transl. by Bennet), 3d ed., 1879, p. 82.

2. Zoöl.: A protuberance, or gemmule, on polypes and similar animals, which ultimately develops into a complete animal.

bud-scales, s. pl.

Bot.: Scales protecting buds which persist through the winter. They are dry, viscid, covered with hairs, or smooth.

būd (1), v. t. [From bud (1), s. (q. v.)] (Scotch.) To bribe.

"I have nothing that can hire or bud grace, for if grace would take hire, it were no more grace."—Rutherford's Letters, 86.

būd (2), *būd'-dūn, v. i. & t. [From bud (2), s. (q. v.) In Dut. botten.]

A. Intransitive:

1. Lit. (of plants): To put forth buds.

"The rose is fairest when 'tis budding new,
And love is loveliest when embalmed in tears."
Scott: Lady of the Lake, iv. 1.

2. Fig. (of animals or of anything):

(1) To begin to grow.

"There the fruit, that was to be gathered from the conflux, quickly budded out."—Clarendon.

(2) To be blooming.

B. Transitive: [BUDDING, C. 1.]

būd (3), būde, v. impers. Behooved.

"When first this war i' France began,
Our blades bude hae a meddlin' hand."
Hogg: Scot. Pastorals, p. 15.

būd'-dēd, pa. par. & a. [BUD, v.]

*būd'-dēr, s. [Eng. bud; -er.] That which buds; a plant, a flower.

"Now while the early budders are just new."
Keats: Endymion, i. 4.

Būd'-dha, s. [Pali booddho = known, understood, possessing knowledge, enlightened, wise; Booddha = the personage described in this article. Sometimes the word is spelled with one d, but this is erroneous, Boodh in Sanscrit being = not the religious teacher but the planet Mercury.]

1. Gen.: A man possessed of infinite or infallible knowledge (Childers); a deified religious teacher. There was said to be a series of them, a number having come and gone before Gautama, the personage described under No. 2. When no Buddha is on earth, the true religion gradually decays, but it flourishes in pristine vigor when a new Buddha is raised up. He is not, however, entitled at once to that honorable appellation; it is only after he has put forth arduous exertions for the faith that he attains to Buddhahood. Most of the Buddhas preceding the personage described under No. 2 appear to have been purely fabulous. His immediate predecessor, Kasyapa or Kassapo, may have been a real person.

"... Sakya Muni, who is usually looked upon as the founder of Buddhism; but so far from this being the case, Sakya Muni was the fourth Buddha of the actual age or second division of the Kappo."—Col. Sykes in Jour. Asiat. Soc. (1841), vol. vi., p. 261.

2. Specialty: A distinguished personage of Aryan descent, whose father was king of Kapilavastu, an old Hindu kingdom at the foot of the Nepalese mountains, about 100 miles north of Benares; he was of the Sakhya family, and the class of the Gautamas, hence his distinguished son was often called Sakhya Muni or Saint Sakya, and Gautama or Guadama. The Chinese call him Fo, which is the name Buddha softened in the pronunciation. The Aryan invaders of India looked down with contempt upon the Turanian inhabitants of that land, and to keep their blood uncontaminated developed the system of caste. Buddha, whose human sympathy was wide-reaching, broke through this old restraint, and though he was himself an Aryan, preached the equality of races, a doctrine which the oppressed Turanians eagerly embraced. By the common account he was born in B. C. 622, attained to Buddhahood in 580, and died in 543, or in the opinion of some in B. C. 477, and other years than these, such as 400 B. C., or even lower, have been contended for. Buddha became deified by his admiring followers. Those images of an Oriental god made of white marble, so frequently seen in museums and even in private houses, are representations of Buddha.

Būd'-dha-hōod, s. [Sansk. Booddha; and Eng. suff. -hood.] The state of a Buddha.

Būd'-dha-shīp, s. [Sansk. Booddha; and Eng. suff. -ship.] The degree or condition of a Buddha.

Būd'-dhism, s. [Sansk. & Pali Booddha (BUD-DHA), and Eng. suff. -ism.]

Theol., Phil. & Hist.: The system of faith introduced or reformed by Buddha. [BUDDHA.] In its origin Buddhism was a reaction against the caste pretensions of the Brahman and other Aryan [ARYAN] invaders of India, and was therefore eminently fitted to become, as it for a long time was, the religion of the vanquished Turanians [TURANIAN.] As might have been anticipated, the equality of all castes was, and is, one of its most fundamental tenets. [CASTE.] Another tenet is the deification of men who, when raised to Buddhahood, are called Buddhas. Professors of the faith enumerate about one hundred of these personages, but practically confine their reverence to about seven. Preëminent among these stands Buddha himself. Personally, he never claimed divine honors. It was his disciples who first entitled him Sakya Muni, i. e., Saint Sakya. (For other names, such as Gautama, &c., given to him, see BUDDHA.) As Gautama, though adored as superhuman, is, after all, confessedly only a deified hero, it has been disputed whether his followers can be said to admit a Supreme Intelligence, Governor of this and all worlds. In philosophy, they believe the universe to be a māyā, an illusion or phantom. The later Brahmanists do the same; but in the opinion of Krishna Mohun, Banerjee, and others, these latter seem to have borrowed the tenet from the Buddhists rather than the Buddhists from them. Of the six schools of Hindu philosophy, those which Buddhism most closely approaches are the Sankhya philosophy of Kapila and the Yoga philosophy of Patanjali. Buddhism enjoins great tenderness to animal life. The felicity at which its professors aim in the future world is called Nirvāna, or, more accurately, Nibbanam. It has been disputed whether this means annihilation or blissful repose. Mr. Robt. Cæsar Childers, in his dictionary of the Pali language, uses strong arguments in favor of the former view. Buddhism was attended by an enormous development of monasticism.

The language in which Gautama or Buddha taught was the Magadhī or Pali, the language of Magadha, now called Bahar or Behar. [PALI.] It was a Prakrit or Aryan vernacular of a province, but has now been raised to the dignity of the Buddhist sacred tongue throughout the world. Gautama's followers believe that his sayings were noted down in the Tripitaka, or "Three Treasuries of Discipline, Doctrine and Metaphysics," which constitute the Buddhist scriptures. What their real age is has been a matter of dispute; the discovery by General Cunningham, in 1874, of allusions to them in the Bharhut Sculptures, which are of date third century B. C., is in favor of their genuineness and antiquity. [BUDDHIST ARCHITECTURE.] This work is in Pali; the Sanscrit Buddhist books discovered by Brian Hodgson in Nepal are much more modern, and present a corrupt form of Buddhism.

The first general council of the Buddhist Church was held at Rajagriha, the capital of the Magadha kingdom, in B. C. 543; the second at Vesal (Allahabad [?], or a place near Patna) about B. C. 443 or 377 (?), and a third at Pataliputra (Gr. Palibothra = modern Patna), on the Ganges, in B. C. 307 or 250. This last one was called by Asoka, an emperor ruling over a great part of India, who had been converted to Buddhism, and is sometimes called the Constantine of that faith, having established it as the state religion of his wide realm. He sent missionaries into Western, Central and Southern India, and also to Ceylon and to Pegu. Buddhism was dominant in India for about 1,000 years after its establishment by Asoka. Then, having become corrupt and its vitality having decayed, reviving Brahmanism prevailed over it, and all but extinguished it on the Indian continent, though a modification of it, Jainism, still exists in Marwad and many other parts. It has all along held its own, however, in Ceylon. On losing continental India, its missionaries transferred their efforts to China, which they converted, and which still remains Buddhist. The religion of Gautama flourishes also in Thibet, Burmah and Japan, and is the great Turanian faith of the modern as of the ancient world. [BUDDHISTS.] [BRAHMANISM.]

The Rev. G. Smith points out resemblances between Buddhism and Roman Catholicism (these, it may be added, were first discovered by the Jesuit missionaries, who were greatly perplexed by them): "There is the monastery, celibacy, the dress and caps of the priests, the incense, the bells, the rosary of beads, the lighted candles at the altar, the same intonations in the services, the same ideas of purgatory, the praying in an unknown tongue, the offerings to departed spirits in the temple." The closest similarity is in Lamaism, an amplification of Buddhism in Thibet. [LAMAISM.] But most of the resemblances are ceremonial; there is no close similarity in doctrine between the two faiths.

"There is also something stronger than a presumption of the existence of Buddhism previous to Sakya Muni's ministry."—Col. Sykes in Jour. Asiat. Soc., vi. 261.

Būd'-dhist, a. & s. [Sansk., Booddha, Eng., Buddh (a), and Eng. suff. -ist.]

A. As adjective: Pertaining or relating to Buddha or to Buddhism.

"Besides the Buddhist Scriptures, which are the oldest Buddhist writings extant, . . ."—Times, December 2, 1875.

B. As substant.: One professing the Buddhist faith. The Buddhists are not less than from 350 to 455 millions in number, and constitute between one-fourth and one-third of the human race.

Būd'-dhis-tic, a.

Būd'-dhistic architecture. A style of architecture characteristic of the Indian or other Buddhists. There is no known specimen of architecture in India, the date of which carries us beyond the third century before Christ. When the curtain rises the architecture visible is Buddhist. In 250 B. C. the great emperor Asoka introduced the first great era of Indian architecture, that of the Buddhists proper. Up to this time all erections had been wood; with him the use of stone commenced. He engraved edicts, enjoining tenderness and humanity to animals, on lats (pillars) [LAT], in Cuttack, Peshawur, and Surastra, in the Dhun or Dhon, and other parts of the Himalayas and Thibet. He built innumerable topes (mounds). [TOPE.] No built temples or monasteries of Buddhist origin have come down to our times, if indeed any ever existed; but multitudes of rock-cut temples and monasteries assembled in groups have been found in Behar, Cuttack, the Bombay presidency, and elsewhere. Those of Behar, which are cut in granite, are the oldest, and it is from bihar = a monastery, that Behar itself is called. Those of Cuttack followed. Those of the Bombay presidency, embracing nine-tenths of the whole, were the last; they are cut in amygdaloidal trap. The Buddhist architecture, though essentially independent, yet showed a tinge of Greek influence. It originated the Jaina system of architecture. [JAINA ARCHITECTURE.] (Fergusson.)

būd'-dīng, pr. par., a. & s. [BUD (2), v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

"'Tis true your budding Miss is very charming."
Byron: Beppo, 39.

C. As substantive:

1. Hortic.: The operation of grafting a bud from one plant upon the stock of some nearly-allied species. A bud, with the leaf to which it is axillary, is cut with a sharp knife from the stem on which it grew. It is inserted into an incision shaped like a capital T (T) in the stock of the allied tree, and then tied round by a ligature of matting.

2. A variety of fissure. [GEMMIPARITY.] (Rossiter.)

*2. To live dwell.

"Brittens the baronage, that bieldex tharein."—Morte Arthure, 1241.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between to build, to erect, and to construct: "The word build by distinction expresses the purpose of the action; erect indicates the mode of the action; construct indicates contrivance in the action. What is built is employed for the purpose of receiving, retaining, or confining; what is erected is placed in an elevated situation; what is constructed is put together with ingenuity. All that is built may be said to be erected or constructed; but all that is erected or constructed is not said to be built; likewise what is erected is mostly constructed, though not vice versa. We build from necessity; we erect for ornament; we construct for utility and convenience. Houses are built, monuments erected, machines are constructed." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) bŭlb, s. & a. [In Fr. bulbe; Sp., Port. & Ital. bulbo; from Lat. bulbus; Gr. bolbos=a certain bulbous plant.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. In the same sense as II. 1. (q. v.)

2. A protuberance shaped more or less like a bulb, as the bulb of a chronometer.

"If we consider the bulb or ball of the eye."—Ray.

II. Technically:

1. Botany: A scaly body, formed at or beneath the surface of the ground, sending roots downward from its lower part and a stem upward from its center. It propagates itself by developing new bulbs in the axils of the scales of which it is formed. There are two kinds of bulbs:

(1) a tunicated bulb, literally a coated bulb, that is, a bulb furnished with a tunic or covering of scales, the outer series of which is thin and membranous, example, the onion; and (2) a naked bulb, or one in which the outer scales are not membranous and united but distinct and fleshy like the inner ones, example, the lilies. The so-called solid bulb of the crocus is, properly speaking, not a bulb at all, but an underground stem with buds upon it, technically called a corm [CORM], whereas a proper bulb is analogous not to an underground stem but to a bud only.

2. Hort.: Bulbs placed in water tend to rot; they flourish best when fixed in very light soil or even in the air an inch above water, into which their roots enter. They should have abundance of light.

B. As adjective: [BULB-TUBER.]

bŭlb-tuber, bulbo-tuber, s. A corm.

bŭ-lim'-ŭ-a, s. [BULIMY.]

bŭ-lim'-ŭ-lŭs, s. [From Lat. bulimus (q. v.); and dimin. suffix -ulus.]

Zoöl.: A sub-genus of Bulimus (q. v.). Above three hundred species are known.

bŭ-lim'-ŭs, s. [From Lat. bulimus; Gr. boulimos=(1) extreme hunger, (2) weakness of the stomach, fainting; bous=an ox, and limos=hunger, famine.]

Zoöl.: A large genus of mollusks, family Helecidæ (Land-snails). The shell is oblong or turreted, with the longitudinal margins unequal. The animal is like that of Helix. The genus is widely distributed. The European species are mostly small, but Bulimus ovatus of South America is six inches long. In 1875 the known recent species were 1,120, the fossil thirty, the latter from the Eocene upward.

"The tropical bulimi cement leaves together to protect and cement their large bird-like eggs."—Woodward: Mollusca, p. 15.

bŭ-lim'-ŭ, bŭ-lim'-ŭ, bŭ-lim'-ŭ-a, s. [From Gr. boulimia=ravenous hunger.] [BULIMUS.]

*I. Ord. Lang. (Of the forms bulimy and boulimy):

1. Lit.: The same as II.

2. Fig.: Insatiable desire for anything.

"It stretches out his desires into an insatiable boulimy."—Scott: Serm. (1687), Works, ii. 75.

II. Med. (Chiefly of the form bulimia): A most inordinate appetite utterly disproportioned to the wants of the body; the stomach is greatly enlarged, hanging down like a pouch. This affection is very rare.

bŭlk (1), *bolke (Eng.), bouk, buik (Scotch), s. [Icel. bŭlki=a heap; Dan. bulk=a lump; O Sw. bolke=a heap; Wel. bulg=a swelling. Connected with bulge (q. v.).]

bŭlk'-ŷ, a. [Eng. bulk; -y.] Of great bulk or dimensions; large.

"Latreus, the bulkiest of the double race, Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Halesus grace."
Dryden.

As these despatches were too bulky to be concealed in the clothes of a single messenger, it was necessary to employ two confidential persons."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xv.

¶ Crabb thus distinguishes between bulky and massive:—"Whatever is bulky has a prominence of figure; what is massive has compactness of matter. The bulky, therefore, though larger in size, is not so weighty as the massive. Hollow bodies commonly have a bulk; none but solid bodies can be massive. A vessel is bulky in its form; lead, silver, and gold, massive." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) bŭll (1), bŭlle, bŭl, boole, bolle, bule, bole, s., v. t. & a. [In O. Icel. boli; Dan. bulle; Dut. bul, in compos. bulle; O. Dut. bulle, bolle; Ger. bulle; Ir. bolan=a full-grown cow; bolog=a heifer; Wel. buid; Lith. bullus; Lett. bolis; Slav. vol; Bohem. wole; Pol. wol. From A. S. bellan=to bellow, roar, or bark (Somner). Or from Celt. buile=fine, large, comely, beautiful.] [B. 2, ¶.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary language:

1. Literally:

(1) The male of the bovine mammal (Bos taurus) of which the cow is the female.

"Dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of flesh?" Shakesp.: Tempest, iii. 3.

(2) The male of any other bovine mammal.

"Pliny's Æthiopian bull with blue eyes might refer to this species, . . ."—Griffith: Cuv., iv. 401.

(3) The male of some other large mammals; the elephant, for instance.

2. Figuratively:

(1) Scripture: A rough, fierce, cruel man.

"Many bulls have compassed me; strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round."—Ps. xxii. 12.

(2) Literature: One whose aspect and procedure somewhat suggest those of a bull.

¶ John Bull: A satirical personification of the English people, derived from Arbuthnot's History of John Bull. Some points of resemblance between Mr. Bull and the quadruped after which he is named may be indicated. Compared with the slimmer natives of southern climes, he is a massive, and even ungainly, animal; certain spectacles, especially if defiantly presented, powerfully excite him, and when danger is in his path his general practice is to shut his eyes and run forward.

¶ To take the bull by the horns: Boldly, if not even rashly, to attack a difficulty, regardless of the consequences which will result from failure.

II. Technically:

1. Zoölogy: [A. 1.]

2. Astron.: The constellation Taurus (q. v.).

"And the bright Bull receives him."

Thomson: Seasons; Spring.

3. Stock Exchange: One who operates in expectation of the rise of stock, and, perhaps to render his speculation profitable, takes means with others, if he can, to help them up, even as a bull tries to fling people in the air with his horns. His natural and unceasing foe is called a bear. [BEAR (1), s., II. 1.]

B. As adjective: In compos.—

1. Specially:

(1) Pertaining to the quadruped defined under A.

(2) Male, as opposed to female. [BULL-CALF.]

2. Gen.: Large; as, bull-head, bulrush.

¶ A writer in All the Year Round for June 5, 1880, considers that bull in this sense is not from bull the animal, but from Oelt. buile = fine, large, comely, beautiful. He thinks it has this meaning in the words bull-dog, bull-rush, bull-frog, bull's-eye, bull-finch, bull-trout, bull-beggar, bull-fly, bull-weed, bull-wort and bull-speaking, in the epithet John Bull, and in the American salutation "Bully (i. e., fine) for you."

¶ Compound of obvious signification: Bull-bearing (Shakesp.: Troil. & Cres., ii. 3).

bull, v. t. To operate on exchange in such a manner as to raise the price of stocks, &c.

bull-baiting, bull bayting, s. The baiting of a bull; the setting dogs upon a bull to harass it. In Queen Elizabeth's time, and subsequently, it was a common amusement.

"Entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting!"—Addison.

bull-bat, s. [So named (1) from a booming sound which it makes in the air when flying, and (2) from the resemblance of its flight to that of a bat.] A name given in this country to a bird, the American Goat-sucker (Caprimulgus americanus.)

bull-bee, s. The same as BULL-FLY (q. v.).

bull-beef (pl. bull-beeves), s. Beef derived from a bull. It is coarse in character.

"They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves."
Shakesp.: 1 Hen. VI., i. 2.

bull-brier, s. A species of large brier (S. Pseudo China) growing in many parts of North America, from the root of which the Indians obtain a farinaceous substance, used by them in making bread. Called also Bamboo-brier and China-brier.

bull-calf, s.

1. Lit.: A he-calf, a male calf.

2. Fig.: A stupid fellow.

bull-doze, s. [BULLDOZE.]

bull-faced, a. Having a face like a bull; large-faced.

bull-feast, s. The same as BULL-FIGHT.

"Victorious still in bull-feast, or in fight."

Scott: The Vision of Don Roderick, 30.

bull-fight, s. A barbarous amusement of great antiquity, having been practiced by the Egyptians, by the Thessalians, and others, but now associated chiefly with Spain, into which it seems to have been first introduced by the Moors. [BULL-BAITING.]

bull-finch, s. [BULLFINCH.]

bull-fish, s. One of the names for the Great Seal (Phoca barbata). It is not a fish, but a mammal.

bull-fly, s. An unidentified insect; also called a bull-bee. (Phillips: World of Words.)

bull-frog, s.

1. Gen.: Any frog which croaks with a deep rather than a sharp sound.

"The bull-frog's note from out the marsh, Deep-mouth'd arose, and doubly harsh."

Byron: Siege of Corinth, 33.

2. Spec.: Some American frogs.

(1) A species of frog (Rana pipiens) found in Carolina and the parts adjacent, which has a voice not unlike that of a bull. It is six or eight inches long, by three or four broad, without the legs. It swallows ducks and young goslings whole. It is difficult to catch from its length of leap, besides which it is generally left unharmed because it is said to purify rather than to pollute the waters in which it lives. (2) Rana ocellata. (3) Rana clamitans. (4) Rana grunniens.

bull-grape, s. The English name of a plant, the Vitis rotundifolia, a North American species of the vine genus with polished reniform cordate-toothed leaves. [BULLER-GRAPE.]

bull-grass, s. A grass, Bromus mollis, or some other species of Bromus.

1. Lit.: Various fishes having large heads, Spec.:

(1) The River Bull-head, a spiny-finned fish Cottus gobio. It is called also the Miller's Thumb and the Tommy Lugge. It has a broad and flat head, the preopercle with one spine, the body dusky clouded with yellow, the belly whitish. Its length is about four inches. The bullhead in this country is confounded with the CATFISH (q. v.).

(2) The fish-genus Aspidophorus, of the same family Triglidae. Aspidophorus europæus is the armed bull-head.

(3) A name given to several species of plover, the black-bellied and the golden.

2. Fig.: A stupid person, a blockhead.

bull-headed, a. Having a head like a bull's; determined, perverse, stubborn; persistent in having one's own way, right or wrong.

bull-hide, s. The hide of a bull, a shield made of bull-hide.

bull-hoof, s. A plant of the Passion-flower order, Murucuja ocellata.

Bull-nose ring: A hook whose knobs enter the nostrils and clamp the dividing cartilage or septum of the nose. It is used to lead vicious or obstinate bulls, and occasionally to fasten or hitch them.

bull-nut, s. A large kind of hickory nut.

bull-of-the-bog, s. The bittern (Scotch, specially of Liddesdale).

" . . . the deep cry of the bog-blitter, or bull-of-the-bog, a large species of bittern."—Scott: Guy Mannering, ch. i.

bull-rush, s. [BULRUSH.]

bulls-and-cows, s. [So called because the spadices, which are sometimes dark-red and sometimes pale-pink or nearly white, give an idea of male and female (Prior).] The flowers of the Cuckow-pint (Arum maculatum).

bull's-eye, s.

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.: The eye of a bull.

2. Fig.: A dark lantern with a thick glass reflector on one side.

II. Technically:

1. Nautical:

(1) A small pulley of hard wood, having a groove round the outside and a hole in the middle, answering the purpose of a thimble.

(2) A bulb or thick disc of glass let into a ship's side or deck.

(3) One of the perforated balls on the jaw-rope of a gaff.

2. Target practice: The center of a target.

3. Glass-making: The central boss which is attached to the bunting-iron or pontil, in the operation of making crown-glass.

4. Optical instruments:

(1) The lens of a dark lantern. [I. 2.]

(2) A plano-convex lens, used as an illuminator to concentrate rays upon an opaque microscopic object.

5. Confect.: A kind of large round balls made of coarse sugar.

Bull's-eye cringle:

Naut.: A wooden ring or thimble used as a cringle in the leech of a sail.

bull's-head, bullis head, s. The head of a bull.

¶ It has been asserted and again denied that in the old turbulent times in Scotland the presentation of a bull's head to a person was the signal for his execution or for his assassination.

" . . . after the dinner was endit, once all the delicate courses taken away, the chancellor (Sir William Crichton) presentit the bullis head befor the earle of Douglas, in signe and token of condemnation to the death."—Pittscottie, p. 405.

Bull's-horn coralline: [So named because the shape of the cells is like a bull's horn.] A zoöphyte of the family Cellariadæ. It is the Eucratia loricata. It is branched subalternate, has the cells conical, with a raised orifice, beneath which is a spinous process.

bull's-nose, s.

1. Lit.: The nose of a bull.

2. Carp.: A term sometimes applied to the angle formed by the junction of two plane surfaces.

bull-terrier, s. A variety of dog, a cross-breed between the bull-dog and terrier.

bull-trout, s. An English name for Salmo erior, called also the Gray-trout, and the Round-tail. It is a British fish.

bull-weed, s. A plant, the Black Centaury (Centaurea nigra).

bull-wort, s. [Prior thinks this should be pool-wort, from growing near pools. This is doubted by Britten and Holland.]

Botany:

1. A name for the Scrophularia genus of plants.

2. An umbelliferous plant, Ammi majus.

bŭll, (2) bŭlle, s. [In Fr. & Ger. bulle; Ital. bulia, bolla. From Low Lat. bulia = a seal or stamp, a letter, an edict, a roll; Class. Lat. bulia = (1) a bubble, (2) a boss, a knob, a stud.]

I. Ecclesiastical:

1. Literally:

(1) The seal appended to the edicts and briefs of the pope.

(2) A letter, edict, brief, or rescript of the pope sealed with such a seal. Such a writing is issued by the pope to the large portion of Christendom of which he is the head, to convey to the churches intimations of his will.

" . . . by publishing that very noted decree, the Bull Unigenitus."—Mosheim: Ch. Hist.

The value of the discovery of America to Spain was seriously jeopardized by the existence of papal bulls authorizing discoveries, and conferring title in 1452, 1454, 1479 and 1481 on Portugal; and the claims of this power were so technically strong that on the familiar principle of "a hair of the dog that bit him," another bull had to be issued to protect Spain; and the famous line of demarkation from north to south pole was drawn by Pope Alexander VI. on May 4, 1492.

So strong still remained the technical claims of Portugal, that it was not till 1750 that the details of a controversy, interesting but fit only for a larger history than this, were finally arranged.

Up to the time of the discovery of America, it will be remembered, the influence of the pope had been paramount and almost universally recognized in international affairs. The law of nations was, in effect, a code of morals demanding for its interpretation and enforcement a spiritual arbiter.

This arbiter, apart altogether from the spiritual authority he claimed and exercised, was at least an acceptable witness to priority of enterprise and to the subsequent title by discovery—a title which, though in the case of most nations, owing to negligence in perfecting it by occupation, is the most precarious of titles, has always been urged with remarkable persistence even as collateral to papal authority.

fāte, fāt, färe, amidst, whāt, fäll, father; wē, wēt, hère, camēl, hēr, thère; pīne, pīt, sire, sīr, marīne; gō, pōt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

It may, indeed, be contended that title by discovery arose originally from the recognition extended papal authorization and ratification; but at a later period the nations of Europe ceased to solicit bulls, and set up title by discovery on their own authority.

The more recent and important papal documents issuing from the Vatican have taken the form of encyclical letters addressed to the whole Catholic church through the pastors and bishops. These encyclicals have attracted the attention of millions of thoughtful minds from the fact that they have not dealt with dead issues, but the living interests of the hour. Notably among these is the remarkable encyclical of Pope Leo XIII. on "The Labor Question," 1892.

2. Fig. In ridicule of the papal edicts described under No. 1. (2): A one-sided statement with an aspect of cleverness, but in which there is an absurdity unperceived by the speaker which renders the sentence ridiculous. (Often used with the word Irish prefixed.)

II. Technically:

1. History:

(1) An imperial edict.

† Golden bull: So named from its seal, which was of gold.

(2) An edict sent forth by the Emperor Charles IV. in 1356, containing an imperial constitution which became the fundamental law of the German empire.

2. Law: To procure, publish, or put in use a papal bull was made treason. (28 Hen. VIII., c. 16; 13 Eliz., c. 2; and 7 Anne., c. 21.)

bull (3), s. & a. [Etym. doubtful. From bull (2) (Johnson). From Eng. bold (Skinner) (?).]

bull-beggar, bull-begger, s. A kind of hobgoblin used to frighten children with.

"A scarebug, a bullbagger, a sight that frayeth and frighteth."—Coles, 469 b.

"These fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt."—Aylife.

bull (pron. bill), v. i. [From bull, s. (q. v.).] Of a cow: To take the bull.

būl'-lā, s. [Lat. bulla=a bubble.]

1. Zoöl.: A genus of mollusks called from the thinness of their shells bubble-shells. The shell is oval, ventricose, convoluted externally, or only partially invested by the animal. The animal has a large cephalic disk bilobed behind; the lateral lobe is much developed. It occurs in temperate and tropical seas from twenty-five to thirty fathoms. Over fifty recent species are known and seventy fossil, the latter from the Oölite onward. (Woodward & Tate.)

2. Med.: [BULLÆ.]

būl'-lāce, *bol'-āce, *bol'-las, *bol'-as, s. & a. [In Mod. Norm. Fr. beloce; O. F. beloce (Littre); from Ir. bulos=a prune; Gael. bulaistear (Skeat).]

A. As substantive:

1. The fruit of the tree described under 2.

"Bolas frute (bollas, P.). Pepulum, mespilum, Kylw. Cath."—Prompt. Parv.

"Bolaces and blake-beries that on breres growen."

William of Palerne (ed. Skeat), 1,809.

2. The English name of a tree, the Prunus communis, var. insititia. It is akin to the var. spinosa (the sloe), but differs in having the peduncles and underside of the leaves pubescent and the branches slightly spinous, whereas the spinosa has the peduncles glabrous, the leaves ultimately so also, and the branches decidedly spinous.

"In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces: roses cut or removed, to come late."—Bacon: Essays; Of Gardens.

B. As adjective: (See the compounds.)

bullace-plum, s. The name of a fruit.

† The Jamaica Bullace-plum: The fruit of Melicocca biguga.

bullace-tree, *bolas tre, s. [BULLACE, 2.]

bū'-reau (eau as ō), s. [Fr. bureau=a writing-table or desk, an office, the people engaged in such an office; from bureau=drugget, Low Lat. burellum, such writing-tables being at first covered with this kind of cloth.]

1. A desk or writing-table with drawers for papers; a chest of drawers with a writing-board.

"For not the desk with silver nails,

Nor bureau of expense,

Nor standish well japann'd, avails

To writing of good sense."

Swift.

¶ It is used analogously for a chest of drawers, even without such a board, especially one of an ornamental character.

2. Now:

- (1) An office in which such a bureau is used; an office where business is transacted.

(2) The occupants of such an office; the officers working in an office, especially a state one, under a chief.

bur-i-al, bur-i-all, bur-i-el, bīr-i-el, bur-ŷ-el, bur-ŷ-els, bur-i-els, (bur as bē), s. & a. [Eng. bury; -al; A. S. birgels=a sepulcher; birgen, byrgan, byrgen=a burying, a burial, a tomb; O. S. bargisl=a sepulcher. From Eng. bury; A. S. byrian, byrgian, birian, burian=to bury.] [BURY.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary language:

*1. Originally. (Of the forms burials, buryels, biriel, burial): A tomb, a burying-place.

" . . . that bidden sepulchris of profetes and maken faire the birielis of iust men."—Wycliffe. (Purvey), Matt. xxiii. 29.

2. Now. (Of the form burial): The act of burying, the state of being buried, interment, sepulture.

(1) Gen.: In the foregoing sense.

" . . . the duke take order for his burial."

Shakesp.: Richard III., i. 4.

(2) Spec.: The act of placing anything under earth or water.

"We have great lakes, both salt and fresh; we use them for burials of some natural bodies; for we find a difference of things buried in earth, and things buried in water."—Bacon.

II. Technically:

1. Archæol. & Hist.: Most nations have selected burial as the best method to dispose of their dead; the practice of burning them on a funeral pile, prevalent to a limited extent among the Greeks and the Romans and nearly universal among the Hindoos, being the exception and not the rule. About 1860 (?) B. C. Abraham buried Sarah. The Egyptians, and, at least, in some special cases, the Jews, embalmed their dead (Gen. i. 3, 26; John xix. 39, 40). [EMBALMENT.] In Europe, according to Sir John Lubbock, interments in which the corpse is in a sitting or contracted posture belong to the stone age, those in which it has been burnt and only the ashes interred to the bronze age, and those in which the corpses extended, presumably to the age of iron. During the first French Revolution a proposal was made to adopt the process of cremation, but it failed. The project was revived on the continent during this century, and recommended in England in 1873 by Dr. Henry Thompson, but as yet it has met with little acceptance from the public. In 1875 Mr. Seymour Hadden advocated the "earth to earth" system of sepulture, and in the same year wicker coffins were exhibited at Stafford House, but this innovation, too, has as yet been unpopular.

Several crematories are in operation in the United States, the best known of which are those at St. Louis, Mo., Albany, N. Y., Fresh Pond, N. Y., and Chicago, Ill.

2. Law: In 1693, 1733 and 1783 Acts were passed in England imposing a tax on burials, but it has been long since repealed. A felo de se or suicide was formerly buried in the highway with a stake driven through his body, and all his goods and chattels were forfeited to the king. (Blackstone, bk. iv., ch. 14.)

B. As adjective: (See the compounds.)

¶ Obvious compound: Burial-plain.

burial-aisle, s. An aisle in which a body has been interred. (Lit. & fig.)

"Looks he also wistfully into the long burial-aisle of the Past."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. i., ch. xi.

burial-board, s. A board of persons appointed to regulate burials.

burial-case, s. A mummy-shaped form of coffin, alleged to be an improvement on the ordinary one in the lids, in having glass over the face, in the means of fastening, in hermetical sealing, and in the complete isolation of the body from air by enveloping the corpse in a resinous or other air-excluding compound.

burial-ground, s. Ground set apart or used for the interment of the dead.

1. Literally:

"Their mingled shadows intercept the sight Of the broad burial-ground outstretched below."

Scott: Don Roderick.

2. Figuratively:

" . . . we at the time exclaimed that it was the burial-ground of all the goats in the island."—Darwin: Voyage round the World (ed. 1870), ch. viii., p. 168.

burial-place, s. A place for burying the dead.

¶ A more general word than burying-ground. When one is interred in a church or committed to the deep the church or the ocean-bed is to him a burial-place, but it is not the burial-ground in which he sleeps. The Romans interred their dead outside the cities; the early Christians imitating them in this respect. Then the latter began to bury around their churches. Haydn makes the first Christian burial-place be instituted in 596, burial in cities in 742, in consecrated places in 750, and in churchyards in 758.

"At rest on the tombs of the knightly race,
The silent throngs of that burial-place."

Hemans: The Lady of Provence.

burn-wood, s. Wood for fuel. (Scotch.)

burn* (2), burne*, s. [A. S. beorn=a warrior, a chief.] A man, a knight, a noble. [BAIRN.]

"... but hath him bore so buxumly . . . that ich burn him preyseth, & vch a burn of this world . . . worchipeth him one."—William of Palerne, 510-11.

"Now blysse burne mot the bytyde."

Ear. Eng. Allit. Poems: The Pearl, 397.

burn (3), s. & a. [A. S. burne=a bourn, a stream, a fountain, a well; Icel. brunnr; Ger. brunnen=a fountain, a spring.] A bourn, water, a rivulet, a stream. [BOURN.]

"Where three lairds' lands met at a burn."

Burns: Halloween.

¶ Burn in the names of English and Scotch towns implies that the latter are near a stream, as Blackburn, Bannockburn. It corresponds to the more common English word bourne, as Eastbourne.

burn-brae, s. The acclivity at the bottom of which a rivulet runs. (Scotch.)

burn'-a-ble, a. [Eng. burn, v.; and suffix -able.] Able to burn or be burnt. (Cotgrave.)

burne* (1), buyrne*, s. [BAIRN.] A child, a man.

burne* (2), s. [BIRNIE.]

burned (1), burnt, berned*, barnde*, brend*, brende*, brent* (Eng.), burnt, brunt, bront*, brende*, brent* (Scotch), pa. par. & a. [BURN, v.; BURN'T.]

burned* (2), bourned*, boined*, brenned*, brend*, brende*, pa. par. & a. [BURN (2), v.] Burnished.

"Wrought al of burned steel, . . ."

Chaucer: C. T., 1, 935.

būr'-nēr, s. [Eng. burn; -er. In Ger. brenner, verbrenner.]

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Of persons: One who burns any thing or person.

2. Of things: A thing which does so. (Often used in composition, as a gas-burner.)

II. Technically:

1. Lighting:

(1) The part of a lighting apparatus at which combustion takes place.

(2) The corresponding portion of a gas-heater or of a gas-stove.

2. Chem.: [BUNSEN'S BURNER.]

¶ Bunsen's Burner: [Named from Herr Bunsen, professor of chemistry at the University of Breslau.]

Chem.: A Bunsen's burner consists of a jet surmounted by a wide brass tube, at the bottom of which are several holes for the admission of air.

The air and gas mix in the wide tube in such proportion that they burn with a non-luminous flame.

The flame has the following structure. It consists of (1) a dark cone a, consisting of cold unburnt coal-gas, mixed with 62 per cent. of air.

(2) The flame-mantle b, composed of burning coal-gas mixed with air.

(3) A luminous point c, seen only when the air-holes at the base of the lamp are partly closed; the area of this zone may be regulated by opening or shutting the holes to a greater or less extent.

The flame of a Bunsen's burner:

(1) At a low temperature, is suitable for observing the flame colorations of volatile substances.

(2) At the highest temperature, is suitable for fusions at high temperatures.

¶ The lower oxidizing flame is suitable for oxidation of substances in borax or other beads.

The lower reducing flame is suitable for reductions on charcoal, and for fusing borax or other beads in the reducing flame.

The upper oxidizing flame (obtained by admitting the maximum of air) is suitable for oxidation at lower temperatures than are found at (2) (q. v.).

The upper reducing flame is suitable for reductions, and possesses greater reducing power than the lower reducing flame already mentioned.

būr'-nēt (1), a. & s. [From Fr. brunette=a dark brown stuff formerly worn by persons of quality; Low Lat. bruneta, brunetum; from Fr. brun=brown.] [BROWN, BRUNETTE.]

A. As adj.: Of a brown color.

burnet-moth, s.

Ord. Lang. & Entom.: The name for the genus of Hawkmoths called Anthrocera, or by some Zygæna.

Anthrocera Flipendula is the Six-spot Burnet-moth. The six spots, which are on the superior wings, are red, while the rest of the wings are green. It is common in England in June. Its caterpillar, which feeds on the plantain, trefoil, dandelion, &c., is yellow, spotted with black. A. Loti is the Five-spot Burnet-moth. It is less common. The caterpillar feeds on honeysuckle, bird's-foot, trefoil, &c.

būr'-nēt (2), s. & a. [From Eng. burn, v. (1), or s. (1), because the root of the Poterium (def.) is acrid or pungent in taste.]

A. As substantive:

Ord. Lang. & Bot.: The English name for Poterium, a genus of plants belonging to the order Rosaceæ (Roseworts). It is also called Salad-burnet and Lesser Burnet. The Common, or Garden Salad-burnet (Poterium sanguisorba) is a herbaceous plant one or two feet high, with pinnate leaves and dull purplish flowers. The leaves taste and smell like cucumber, and are eaten in salad. The Muricated Burnet, or Salad-burnet (A. muricatum), has larger fruit than the former, to which it is closely allied. It is not common. There are other species. The Great Burnet is Sanguisorba officinalis.

B. As adjective: (See the compounds.)

burnet-bloodwort, s. A plant, Sanguisorba officinalis.

burnet-ichneumon, s.

Entom.: An ichneumon, the larva of which preys upon the caterpillar of the Burnet-moth.

burnet-rose, s. A book-name for Rosa spinosissima.

burnet-saxifrage, s. A book-name of Pimpinella, a genus of umbelliferous plants, of which the Common Burnet-saxifrage (Pimpinella saxifraga) and the Greater Burnet-saxifrage (P. magna) are species. The former is frequent, the latter inclining to rare. The root of the common species is acrid, and is used as a masticatory in toothache, also as an external application to remove freckles, and in gargles to dissolve viscid mucus.

būr'-nētte*, s. [BURNETTE.]

"In mournyng blak, as bright burnettes." The Romaunt of the Rose.

būr'-nēt-tize, v. t. [Named after Burnett, who patented the process in 1837.] To use a certain process to prevent decay in wood and fibrous fabrics. [BURNETTIZING.]

būr'-nēt-tiz-ing, pr. par. & s.

A. As present participle: (See the verb.)

B. As substantive: A process for preventing decay of wood and fibrous materials or fabrics. The wood or fiber is immersed in a solution of chloride of zinc, 1 pound; water, 4 gallons for wood, 5 gallons for fabrics, 2 gallons for felt, contained in a wooden tank. Timber is saturated two days for each inch of thickness, and then set on end to drain for from two to fourteen weeks. Cotton, yarns, cordage, and woollens are immersed for forty-eight hours. (Knight.)

būr'-nē-wīn, s. [From Eng. burn; Scotch e=the, and wīn=wind. Burn the wind.] A ludicrous appellation for a blacksmith.

"Then Burnewin comes on like death At ev'ry chaup."

Burns: Scotch Drink.

būr'-nīe, †būr'-nīy, s. [From Scotch burn=a stream, and diminut. suff. -ie=little.] A little "burn," bourn, or stream. (Scotch.)

A. As present participle: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

B. As adjective:

I. Literally:

1. Flaming.

"Thus once, when Troy was wrapped in fire and smoke, The helpless gods their burning shrines forsook."

Dryden: To the Lord Chancellor Hyde.

2. Hot.

"I know that from thine agony Is wrung that burning rain."

Hemans: The Vaudois Wife.

II. Figuratively:

1. Of the body: Producing or feeling a sensation of bodily heat.

"Her burning brow, or throbbing breast."

Hemans: Tale of the Secret Tribunal.

2. Of the heart or the emotions:

"... that burning shame Detains him from Cordelia."

Shakesp.: Lear, iv. 3.

3. Of the utterance of the lips, or of the pen, or of anything similar:

"Every burning word he spoke."

Cowper: Boadicea.

C. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language.

1. & 2. The act or operation of consuming by fire, or the state of being so consumed.

"... burning for burning, wound for wound, . . ."

—Exod. xxi. 25.

3. Fire, flame. (Lit. or fig.)

(1) Literally:

"In liquid burnings, or on dry, to dwell, Is all the sad variety of hell."

Dryden.

(2) Figuratively:

"The mind surely, of itself, can feel none of the burnings of a fever."—South.

II. Technically:

1. Law:

(1) Maliciously to burn a house, barn, &c., is felony. [ARSON.]

(2) Burning was once itself a penalty.

(a) Burning in the hand: [BRANDING.]

(b) Burning alive: Women were formerly burned alive in England for treason, as men were for the crime against nature, and under Edward I. for arson. It was also the punishment during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries for so-called heresy; the first person who thus suffered being Sir William Sawtre, priest of St. Osyth, London, 12th February, 1401. The cruel practice reached its consummation in Queen Mary's reign (1553-8), during three years of which 277 persons, most of them religious reformers, were consumed at the stake. (Blackstone: Comment. &c.)

2. Metal-working: Joining metals by melting their adjacent edges, or heating the adjacent edges and running into the intermediate space some molten fāte, fāt, fāre, amidst, whāt, fāl, father; wē, wēt, hēre, camēl, hēr, thēre; pīne, pīt, sīre, sīr, marīne; gō, pāt, or, wōre, wōlf, wōrk, whō, sōn; mūte, cūb, cūre, unite, cūr, rāle, fūll; trȳ, Sȳrian. æ, œ = ē; ey = ā. qu = kw.

metal of the same kind. It differs from soldering in this: In burning a heat is required sufficient to melt the original metal, and a flux is seldom used. In soldering a lower heat is used and a more fusible metal employed, assisted by a flux. (Knight.)

3. Ceramics: The final heating of clay ware, which changes it from the dried or biscuit condition to the perfect ware. The glaze or enamel is applied to the baked ware, and is vitrified in the burning. (Knight.)

burning-bush, burning bush, s.

2. Botany:

(1) The Artillery plant, Pilea serpyllifolia, an articeous species.

(2) Euonymus atropurpureus, and E. americanus.

(3) Dictamnus fraxinella, a garden plant, which is said to give off so much essential oil that if a light be brought near it it will ignite.

burning-glass, s.

1. Lit. Optics: A convex lens of large size and short focus, used for causing an intense heat by concentrating the sun's rays on a very small area. The larger the circular area of the lens and the smaller the area of the spot on which the concentrated rays fall, the greater is the effect produced. Concave mirrors have been used for similar purposes, and are also called burning-glasses. Their power was known to Archimedes, and it is mythically stated that by their aid he burned a fleet in the harbor of Syracuse, 214 B. C. Their powers were increased by Settalla; Tschirnhausen, 1680; Buffon, 1747; and Parker and others more recently. The following experiments were made about 1800, with a lens or burning-glass which cost $3,500, and is said to have been the largest ever made. It was sold to Capt. Mackenzie, who took it to China, and left it at Pekin.

SUBSTANCES FUSED.	WEIGHT.	TIME.
Pure gold	20 grains	4 seconds
Silver	20 "	3 "

Pumice stone	10 "	24 "

Green wood takes fire instantaneously, water boils immediately, bones are calcined, and things not capable of melting at once become red-hot, like iron.

2. Fig.: Anything which produces the heat of passion. Spec., love.

"Dazzling and rich, as through love's burning-glass."
Moore: Veiled Prophet of Khorassan.

burning-house, s.

Metal.: A miner's term for a kiln or roasting-furnace, in which volatile mineral matters are expelled, as the sulphur from tin pyrites; a kiln.

burning-mirror or reflector, s.

Optics: A concave mirror, or a combination of plane-mirrors, so arranged as to concentrate the rays of the sun into a focus and thus produce heat. Its operation is the same as that of a convex lens.

¶ Archimedes is stated to have burnt the Roman fleet of Marcellus before Syracuse, by concentrating on them the force of several large burning-mirrors. [BURNING-GLASS.]

burning-nettle, s. Urtica urens or Urtica pilulifera.

burning-on, s.

Metal.: A process of mending castings by uniting two fractured portions, or by attaching a new piece to a casting.

burning thorny-plant, s.

Bot. or Ord. Lang.: A species of Euphorbia.

būr'-nīsh, *būr'-nīsh, *būr'-nīsch, *būr'-nīšs, v. t. & i. [From Fr. brunissant, pr. par. of brunir=to make brown, from brun=brown.] [BURN (2), v.]

A. Transitive:

1. Of things:

(1) To polish by rubbing, to render smooth, bright, and glossy.

(2) To render bright and glossy without friction.

būsh (1), bushe, busshe, busch, buysh, buysch, bosshe, busk, buske (Eng.), būsh, buss, bus (Scotch), s. & a. [In Fr. buisson=a bush, a thicket; Sp. & Port. bosque; Ital. bosco=a wood; Ger. busch; Dut. bosch; Dan. busk; Sw. buske. Skeat considers that the word is of Scandinavian origin, the Fr., Ital., and similar forms being from the Teutonic.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A thicket, a wood, a grove, a forest, a place overrun with shrubs.

"Ther as by aventure this Palamon
Was in a bush that ne man might se
For sore afered of death was he,"

Chaucer: C. T.; The Knightes Tale, 1,519.

† This sense, or one akin to it, is still common among Australians and Canadians.

2. A single shrub with numerous and close-set branches.

"And stud intill a busk lurkand."

Barbour: The Bruce, vii., 71.

"And the Angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush: and he looked, and behold, the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed."—Exod. iii. 2.

† To beat about the bush: To take circuitous methods of hinting at one's meaning in a matter of special delicacy, instead of blurting out one's desires and intentions in a way to startle and repel. The metaphor is taken probably from sportsmen beating about bushes to start game.

*3. The branch of ivy (as sacred to Bacchus) hung out in front of a tavern to indicate that liquor was sold inside.

"If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue."—Shakesp.: As You Like It, Epil.

II. Technically:

1. Bot., Hortic., &c.: A perennial ligneous plant (usually with several stems issuing from its root), which in its normal or natural state of growth does not attain a girth of more than six inches, and in consequence does not furnish timber. The same as a shrub.

business (pron. bîz'-nêss), bus-î-nêsse, bus-ÿ-nêsse, bus-y-nes (us as îz), bis-y-nêsse, bis-î-nêsse, bes-i-nesse, s. & a. [Eng. busy; -ness.]

As substantive:

I. Subjectively:

†1. The state of being industriously engaged.

"The fantasy and the curious busynesse

Fro day to day gan in the soule imprese."

Chaucer: C. T., 9,451-2.

¶ To do business; to be in active business: To apply one's self steadily to any work.

"The pilours didn business and cure."

Chaucer: The Knightes Tale, 149.

"We don't believe that any man in this country had enough money 126 years ago to live on without being in 'active business.' The business men of those days were accumulating the fortunes that their sons had enough to do in caring for."—New York Sun, Dec. 24, 1893.

2. The state of being anxious; anxiety, care.

3. The act of engaging industriously in certain occupations.

(1) The act of forming mercantile or financial bargains. More generally an abundance of such acts done by separate individuals.

"Apparently business was partial in the Discount Market."—Daily Telegraph, October 8, 1877.

(2) The act of engaging in serious work, as distinguished from mere pastime.

"Pastime and business both it should exclude."

Cowper: Progress of Error.

II. Objectively: That with which one is engaged; that about which one is or should be busy or anxious. Specially—

1. A multiplicity of affairs. [†1.] Specially mercantile transactions, commercial intercourse.

2. A single affair or transaction.

"You are so much the business of our souls, ..."—Dryden.

¶ In this sense it may have a plural.

"... so full of businesses ..."—Shakesp.: All's Well, i. 1.

3. An affair of honor, a duel. (Affectedly.)

"For that's the word of tincture, the business. Let me alone with the business. I will carry the business. I do understand the business. I do find an affront in the business."—Masque of Mercury, &c., vol. v., p. 431.

4. A calling or occupation; also special province, sphere or duty.

"The great business of the senses being to take notice of what hurts or advantages the body."—Locke.

"... the management of a wine and spirit business, or other position of trust."—London Times, November 18, 1878.

5. Legitimate occupation.

"What business has a tortoise among the clouds?"—L'Estrange.

6. That which requires to be done, an object.

"... a perpetual spring will not do their business; they must have longer days, a nearer approach of the sun."—Bentley.

*7. Labor and endeavor.

"To drawe folk to heven by fairnesse,

By good ensample, this was his busynesse."

Chaucer: C. T., Prologue, 520.

¶ Special phrases:

1. A man of business: A man naturally gifted with capacity, adaptation, and love for managing a great commercial enterprise, a department of the political government, or anything similar.

"He was one of the most skillful debaters and men of business in the kingdom."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. iv.

2. To do the business for one: To kill one, destroy or ruin one, that being the most serious thing which can be done to him. (Colloquial.)

3. That's business: An Americanism expressive of faith in the honest intention of another to do serious work.

4. To have no business in a place or to do anything: To have no occupation calling one thither, or no obligation or even right to do the thing.

(1) Lit.: Of persons.

(2) Fig.: Of things.

"A frown upon the atmosphere,

That hath no business to appear

Where skies are blue and earth is gay."

Byron: The Prisoner of Chillon, x.

¶ (a) Crabb thus distinguishes between business, occupation, employment, engagement, and avocation: "Business occupies all a person's thoughts, as well as his time and powers; occupation and employment occupy only his time and strength; the first is mostly regular, it is the object of our choice;

the second is casual, it depends on the will of another. Engagement is a partial employment, avocation a particular engagement: an engagement prevents us from doing anything else; an avocation calls off or prevents us from doing what we wish. ... A person who is busy has much to attend to, and attends to it closely; a person who is occupied has a full share of business without any pressure; he is opposed to one who is idle; a person who is employed has the present moment filled up; he is not in a state of inaction; the person who is engaged is not at liberty to be otherwise employed; his time is not his own; he is opposed to one at leisure."

(b) Business, trade, profession, and art are thus discriminated: "These words are synonymous in the sense of a calling, for the purpose of a livelihood: business is general, trade and profession are particular; all trade is business, but all business is not trade. Buying and selling of merchandise is inseparable from trade; but the exercise of one's knowledge and experience, for purposes of gain, constitutes a business; when learning or particular skill is required, it is a profession; and when there is a peculiar exercise of art, it is an art; every shop-keeper and retail dealer carries on a trade; brokers, manufacturers, bankers, and others carry on business; clergymen, medical, or military men follow a profession; musicians and painters follow an art."

(c) The following is the distinction between business, office, and duty: "Business is what one prescribes to one's self; office is prescribed by another; duty is prescribed or enjoined by a fixed rule of propriety; mercantile concerns are the business which a man takes upon himself; the management of parish concerns is an office imposed upon him often, much against his inclination; the maintenance of his family is a duty which his conscience enjoins upon him to perform. Business and duty are public or private; office is mostly of a public nature: a minister of state, by virtue of his office, has always public business to perform; but men in general have only private business to transact; a minister of religion has public duties to perform in his ministerial capacity; every other man has personal or relative duties, which he is called upon to discharge according to his station." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.) business-like, a. Like business, with proper accuracy, with attention to details, and a careful adaptation of means to the end aimed at, such as is seen in men expert in business, and is one of the most important elements in their success.

"There is no need, however, that it should diminish that strenuous and business-like application to the matter in hand, ..."—J. S. Mill: Political Economy (1848), vol. i., bk. i., ch. vii., § 3, p. 125.

Hali Meidenhad, p. 31.

bŭs'-tam-ite, s. [Named after Mr. Bustamente, its discoverer, and suff. -ite (Min.) (q. v.).]

Min.: A variety of Rhodonite (q. v.). Dana makes it the equivalent of his calciferous Rhodonite. It is grayish-red in color.

bŭs'-tard, s. [In Fr. outarde; Provenc. & O. Fr. bistarde, bostarde, boustarde; Prov. austarde; Sp. avutarda; Port. abetarda, betarda; Ital. ottarda; from Lat. avis tarda (Pliny)=slow bird.]

Ornith.: The name of a genus of European birds, the Otis, which is the typical one of the family Otidae. [OTIS, OTITIDÆ.] The Great Bustard (Otis tarda), the Little Bustard (O. tetrax), and Macqueen's Bustard (O. Macqueeni) are the best known species. The Great Bustard was formerly common in Wiltshire and in Norfolk, England. It has the plumage on the back of a bright-yellow traversed by a number of black bars, the rest of the plumage being grayish. It runs and flies well. It is still common on parts of the European Continent. The Little Bustard (O. tetrax) is a Mediterranean bird. It is brown dotted with black above, and beneath is whitish. The male has a black neck with two white collars.

† Thick-kneed bustard: One of the English names for a bird, the Common Thick-knee (Oidicnemus Bellonii).

*bŭs'-tē-ōus, *bŭs'-tī-ōus, a. [BUSTUOUS.]

*bŭs'-tine, a. [Corrupted from Eng. fustian, or from Fr. buste= "the long, small, or sharp-pointed, and hard-quilted belly of a doublet." (Cotgrave.) (Jamieson.)] Fustian, cloth.

Ramsay: Poems, ii. 70.

bŭs'-tle, *bŭs'-tāl (t silent), *bŭs'-le, *bŭs'-kle, *bŭss'-kle, v. i. & t. [Bustle is probably from Icel. bustla=to bustle, to splash about in the water; and bustla from A. S. bysgian=to be busy. (Skeat, Mahn, &c.)]

A. Intransitive:

1. In a good sense: To be active.

"Come, bustle, bustle; caparison my horse."

Shakesp.: Rich. III., v. 3.

2. In a slightly bad sense: To move about in a fussy manner; to go hither and thither with agitation, and generally with unnecessary noise or stir.

"Wherefore now began the bisshopes to bussle and bear rule."—Joye: Expos. of Daniel, ii.

"Awing the world, and bustling to be great!"

Granville.

"Of idle busy men the restless fry

Run bustling to and fro with foolish haste,

In search of pleasures vain that from them fly."

Thomson: Castle of Indolence, i. 49.

†B. Transitive: To cause to move about with unnecessary noise or stir; to jostle, to push about.

bŭs'-tle (1) (t silent) (Eng.), bŭs'-sle (Scotch), s. [From bustle, v. (q. v.) In Icel. bustla=a bustle, the splashing about of a fish.] The act of hurrying about with much noise, generally to an unnecessary extent; stir, agitation, tumult.

"The bustle of the mariners,

In stillness or in storm."

Wordsworth: The Blind Highland Boy.

† Crabb thus distinguishes between bustle, tumult and uproar: "Bustle has most of hurry in it; tumult most of disorder and confusion; uproar most of noise; the hurried movements of one, or many, cause a bustle; disorderly struggles of many constitute a tumult; the loud elevation of many opposing voices produces an uproar. Bustle is frequently not the effect of design, but the natural consequence of many persons coming together; tumult commonly arises from a general effervescence in the minds of a multitude; uproar is the consequence either of general anger or mirth. A crowded street will always be in a bustle; contested elections are always [not even in the olden time būs'-tō (pl. bustoes), s. [Ital. busto.] [BUST, s.] A bust (prose and poetry).

"... a vestibulo supported with pillars, with some antic bustoes in the niches."—Ashmole, Berk. iii. 115.

"Worn on the edge of days, the brass consumes
The busto molds, and the deep-cut marble, Unsteady to the steel, gives up its charge."

R. Blair: The Grave.

bus-tu-ous, *bus-te-ous, *bus-ti-ous, *boustous, s. [BOISTOUS.] Large in size; strong, powerful; terrible, fierce; rough, unpolished, boisterous, rude. (Dunbar: The Thrissel and the Rose, 5; Doug.: Virgil, 131, 27; Lyndsay: Warkis (1592), p. 167.)

bus'-tu-ous-ness, s. [BOISTOUSNESS.] (Scotch.) (Jamieson.) (Doug.: Virgil, 374, 45.)

bus'-ŷ, *bus'-ie, *bus'-i (us as iz), bes'-y, *bes'-i, *bis'-y, *bis'-i (Eng.), bus'-ŷ, *biz'-zy (Scotch.), a. [A. S. bysig, bisig, bysi (Somner); Dut. bezig.] [BUSINESS.]

1. Of persons, or of the inferior animals: Occupied so that the attention is fixed on what is being done; occupied, with much work to be done.

(1) Occupied at the time to which attention is being directed.

"Gude ale keeps me bare and bizzzy, Gauris me tippie till I be dizzy,"

Remains of Nithsdale Song, p. 90. (Jamieson.)

"Sir, my mistress sends you word
That she is busy and she cannot come,"

Shakesp.: Taming of the Shrew, v. 2.

(2) Troublesome; vexatiously meddlesome.

"The Christians, sometimes valiantly receiving the enemy, and sometimes charging them again, repulsed the proud enemy, still busy with them."—Knolles: History of the Turks.

(3) Habitually occupied, with only necessary remission; bustling, active, industrious.

(a) In a good or in an indifferent sense: Occupied.

"... or the controversy of opinions, wherein the busy world has been so much employed."—Temple.

(b) In a bad sense: Fussy, meddling.

"On meddling monkey, or on busy ape."

Shakesp.: Mid. Night's Dream, ii. 1.

2. Of things personified: At work temporarily or habitually. Used—

(1) Of the hands, feet, &c., or other material instruments of man's action.

"Display with busy and laborious hand
The blessings of the most indebted land."

Cowper: Expostulation.

(2) Of the powers or faculties of the human mind.

"This busy pow'r is working day and night."

Davies.

(3) Of such abstract conceptions as rumor, scandal, science, culture.

"Rumors strange,
And of unholy nature, are abroad,
And busy with thy name."

Byron: Manfred, iii. 1.

¶ Compounds of obvious signification: Busy-looking (Pope), busy-minded.

bus'-ŷ (us as iz), bus-i-en, *bis-i-en (pret. busied), v. t. & i. [From busy, a. (q. v.) A. S. bysigan, bysgian.]

A. Trans.: To make or keep busy, to engage, to employ industriously or with unremitting attention.

"Laverd bisted es of me."—E. Eng. Psalter: Ps. xxxix, 18.

¶ It is followed by with, in, about, amid, &c., or by an infinitive.

"Be it thy course to busy giddy minds With foreign quarrels."

Shakesp.: 2 Hen. IV., iv. 4.

"... busied with dice and claret, love letters and challenges."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xv.

"The learning and disputes of the schools have been much busted about genus and species."—Locke.

¶ It is often used reflexively.

"For the rest, it must be owned he does not busy himself by entering deep into any party."—Swift.

*B. Intrans.: To be active, to be much engaged.

"Martha bisyede aboute moche seruyce."—Wickliffe: Luke x. 40.

"Naf I now to busy bot bare thre dayez."

Sir Gaw. and the Gr. Knight, 1,066.

bus'-ŷ-bōd-ŷ (us as iz), s. [Eng. busy; body.] A person at a certain period or habitually engaged with things with which he has no duty or no clear call to intermeddle. (Used of either sex.)

"And withal they [the younger widows] learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house, and not only idle but tattlers also, and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not."—1 Tim., v. 13.

"William thought him a busybody who had been properly punished for running into danger without any call of duty."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xxi.

bus'-ŷ-bōd-ŷ-ism, s. The habit of intermeddling in affairs with which one has no concern.

"The most common effect of this mock evangelical spirit, especially with young women, is self-inflation and busybodyism."—Coleridge.

bus'-ŷ-īng (us as iz), pr. par. [BUSY, v.]

bus-y-ship, *bis-i-schipe, *bes-i-ship, s. [O. Eng. bisi, besi=Eng. busy, and suffix -ship.] Business, exercise.

"Licomliche bisischepe is to lutel wurth."—Ancren Riwle, p. 384.

būt (1), būtte, *bute, *bot, *bote, *buton, *boute, *buten, prep., conj., adv. & s. [A. S. būtan, būton, būtun, būta, būte, as prep.=without, except; as conj.=unless, except, save, but (Bosworth), from A. S. be, Eng. bi=by, ūtan, ūte=without, beyond; O. Sax. biūtan, batan. [OUT.] In Dut. buiten=without, out, besides, except.]

A. As preposition:

¶ Technically it is one of separation or exclusion. (Bain: Higher Eng. Gram.) Its signification is excepting.

1. Except, unless, besides, save.

"... and we have no objection but the obscurity of several passages by our ignorance in facts and persons."—Swift.

2. Except with, unless with, without.

"'Touch not the cat but a glove,' the motto of the Macintoshes." (Jamieson.)

B. As conjunction:

I. Ordinary Language:

¶ Technically it is a co-ordinate conjunction of the division called adversatives, and the subdivision arrestives, that is, it is a conjunction in which the second sentence or clause is in opposition to the one preceding it, and arrests an inference which that first sentence or clause would else have suggested. (Bain: Higher Eng. Gram.) Its significations are:

1. Properly or strictly:

(1) Yet still, notwithstanding which, contrary to what might have been expected.

¶ It expresses that the inference which would naturally be deduced from the first of the two clauses which it couples together cannot legitimately be drawn, there being a disturbing element which destroys its validity.

"The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart; his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords."—Psalms, lv. 21.

†(2) Excepting that, except that, unless that, were it not that, had it not been that.

¶ Properly it is an ellipsis for but that.

"And, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill thinking."

Shakesp.: Othello, iii. 4.

(3) Except, unless, otherwise than, otherwise than that.

"I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother."

Shakesp.: Temp., i. 2.

"Who shall believe
But you misuse the reverence of your place?"

Ibid.: 2 Hen. IV., iv. 2.

2. More loosely: Yet, still, however, added to which; as a complementary statement to which.

¶ In the second sense it is used, though there is no disappointment of expectation with regard to the inference derivable from the first clause.

(1) Yet, still, however, nevertheless.

"... he [Naaman] was also a mighty man in valor; but he was a leper."—2 Kings, v. 1.

(2) Added to which, as a complementary statement to which.

"By the blessing of the upright the city is exalted; but it is overthrown by the mouth of the wicked."—Prov. xi. 11.

¶ In the foregoing example there is an opposition between the words exalted and overthrown, and between upright and wicked, but the second clause, taken as a whole, is complementary and not antithetical to the first.

(3) Without this consequence following.

"Frosts that constrain the ground,
Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand,"

Dryden.

(4) Than.

"The full moon was no sooner up and shining in all its brightness, but he opened the gate of Paradise."—Guardian.

(5) Therefore, but that, that, for anything otherwise than that.

"It is not therefore impossible but I may alter the complexion of my plays."—Dryden.

"... many looking but he should have died."—Spalding, i. 18. (Jamieson.)

* (6) Provided that.

"But only he have the crystendom."

Robt. of Brunne, 5,764.

II. Technically:

*1. Logic: The connecting word which introduced the minor term of a syllogism.

"God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world; therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made."—Watts: Logic.

¶ The word but in such a case being useless, and even incorrect, is omitted by Whately and other modern logicians.

"All wits are dreaded; some who are admired are wits; therefore some who are admired are dreaded."—Whately: Logic, II., iii., § 5.

2. Math.: As assumed or formally proved.

"... therefore the side DB is greater than the side BC; but DB is equal to BA and AC."—Simson: Euclid, bk. I., prop. 20.

C. As adverb:

*1. Without.

"Whose wule mei beon buten."—Ancren Riwle, p. 418.

2. Not more than, only.

"... there is but a step between me and death."—1 Sam. xx. 3.

D. As substantive:

1. The word but or the idea which it expresses.

"If they [a man's virtues] be like a clear light, eminent, they will stab him with a but of detraction."—Feltham, pt. I., Res. 50. (Richardson.)

2. A hindrance, an impediment. (Jamieson.)

E. In special phrases and compounds:

1. But-and, but and, botand, bot and, conj. [O. Eng. but, bot, &c.] Besides.

"Or I sall bränn yoursel therein Bot and your babies three."

Edom o' Gordon, Percy's Reliques, i. 83.

2. But for: Without, had it not been for.

"Rash man, forbear! but for some unbelief,
My joy had been as fatal as my grief."—Waller.

3. But-if, bot if, but if, but gif, bute if: Unless, except.

"But gif he wold in ani wise . . . him-self schewe forrest."—William of Palerne, 939.

"I cannot gif you that pre-emyence and place, but gif I knew some excellent godlie learning and gude lyfe in you mair than all the aneant Doctouris."—Kennedy of Corsraguell in Keith's Hist., App., p. 197. (Jamieson.)

4. But persaving: Without being seen.

"Thai set thair ledderes to the wall,
And but persaving, com vp all."

Barbour: Bruce, xvii. 91-2.

5. But that, bote that, bute that, buttan thatt, buton that: Unless, except.

"He wolde al his kinelond selten on heore lond, bute that he ideoped weore king of than londe."—Layamon, iii. 252.

6. But yet: Yet, still, notwithstanding, stated more emphatically.

"But yet, Madam—

I do not like but yet; it does allay
The good precedence; fie upon but yet!
But yet is as a gaoler, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor."

Shakesp.: Ant. & Cleop., ii. 5.

but-and, prep. [BUT, E (1).]

but-if, conj. [BUT, E (3).]

būt (2), bütt, prep., adv. & s. [From A. S. būtan, būton, būtun (prep.)=without, except. From prefix be and ūtan=without, beyond.]

butcher-broom, s. The same as BUTCHER'S-BROOM (q. v.).

butcher-knife, s. A knife for cutting meat. The tang of the blade is usually riveted between two scales, which form the handle.

butcher-meat, s. [BUTCHER'S-MEAT.]

*butcher-row, s. A row of shambles.

"How large a shambles and butcher-row would such make!"—Whitlock: Manners of the Eng., p. 97.

*butcher-sire, s. One who kills his child.

"Or butcher-sire that reaves his son of life."

Shakesp.: Venus and Adonis, 766.

butcher's-broom, s. [So called because the green shoots of the plant were formerly used by butchers to sweep their blocks.] The English name of the Ruscus, a genus of plants belonging to the order Liliaceae (Lilyworts), and the section Asparagaeae. It has a rigid branched stem, very rigid and pungent, with ovate, acuminate leaf-like expansion, with a solitary inconspicuous white flower on their upper surface. This is succeeded by a red berry almost as large as a cherry. The tender shoots are sometimes gathered by the poor in spring and eaten like asparagus.

butcher's-meat, butcher-meat, s. Such animal food as a butcher deals in, beef, mutton, lamb, &c., as distinguished from fish, fowl, shellfish, and such like.

butcher's prick-tree, s. Two plants—(1) Rhamnus frangula, (2) Euonymus europaeus.

†butcher-work, s. The work of a butcher. (Contemptuously applied to slaughter in war.)

"That those who loath alike the Frank and Turk, Might once again renew their ancient butcher work."

Byron: Childe Harold, ii. 67.

bütch'-ēr, v. t. [From butcher, s. (q. v.)]

†1. Lit.: To kill an animal, in butcher fashion, for food.

2. Figuratively:

(1) To put a human being to death with sanguinary and remorseless cruelty.

" . . . to strip and butcher the fugitives who tried to escape by the pass."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xiii.

(2) To destroy (anything).

"And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd."

Shakesp.: Richard III., i. 3.

bütch'-ēred, pa. par. & a. [BUTCHER, v.]

bütch'-ēr-īng, pr. par., a. & s. [BUTCHER, v.]

A. & B. As pr. par. & particip. adj.: In senses corresponding to those of the verb.

C. As substantive: The trade of a butcher. (Lit. & fig.)

"Six thousand years are near hand fled, Sin' I was to the butcher's ring bred."

Burns: Death and Doctor Hornbook.

butchering-tool, s. A contemptuous appellation for a sword.

"But as yet, though the soldier wears openly, and even parades, his butchering-tool, nowhere, far as I have traveled, did the schoolmaster make show of his instructing-tool."—Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, bk. ii., ch. iii.

bütch'-ēr-lī-nēss, s. [Eng. butcherly; -ness.]

The quality of being butcherly or resembling a butcher. (Johnson.)

†bütch'-ēr-lý, *boch'-ēr-lý, a. [Eng. butcher; -ly.]

1. Of persons: Butcher-like, sanguinary, cruel.

2. Of things:

†(1) Subjectively: As if inspired by a butcher; as if one were being butchered.

"There is a way, which brought into schools, would take away this butcherly fear in making of Latin."—Ascham.

(2) Objectively: Butcher-like, cruel.

"What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,
This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!"

Shakesp.: Hen. VI., Pt. III., ii. 5.

bütch'-ēr-ý, *boch'-ēr-ý, *boch'-ēr-īe, s. [Eng. butcher; -y. In Fr. boucherie.]

I. Literally:

1. The procedure of a butcher in killing animals for food.

"Yet this man, so ignorant in modern butchery, has cut up half an hundred heroes, and quartered five or six miserable lovers, in every tragedy he has written."—Pope.

*2. A slaughter-house, a place where animals are killed or human beings in large numbers put to death.

"This is no place; this house is but a butchery; Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it."

Shakesp.: As You Like It, ii. 3.

II. Figuratively: Cruel and remorseless slaughter of human beings, especially on an extensive scale.

"I did suborn

To do this ruthless piece of butchery."

Shakesp.: Richard III., iv. 3.

"The butchery was terrible."—Macaulay: Hist. Eng., ch. xii.

*büte, v. t. [From Icel. & Sw. býta=to change, to exchange, to truck, to shift, to divide, to share; Dan. bytte=to exchange; Dut. buiten=to pilfer, to get booty.] [BOOT (1), v.; BOOTY, BUTING.] (Scotch.)

*O. Scots Law: To divide for a prey. (Used specially of prizes at sea.)

" . . . to bute and part the prizes takin ather in thair presence or absence."—Balfour: Pract., p. 636.

*bute, pret. of v. [BEAT, v.] Beat.

"By that he haueed y-blowe a blaste,
On the toun thay bute tabours faste, and made noyse horryble."

Sir Ferumbras (ed. Herrtage), 3,895-96.

*büte, s. [BOOT (1), s. From bute, v.]

1. Remedy, help. (Rowlande and Ottuell (ed. Herrtage), 495.)

2. Booty.

"And gif it beis mair, it sall remane to bute and parting."—Balfour: Pract., p. 640.

*bute, prep. & conj. [BUT.]

bute if, conj. [BUT IF.]

bū-tě-a, s. (Named after the late John, Earl of Bute, a munificent patron of botany.)

Bot.: A genus of papilionaceous plants, consisting of trees and scandent shrubs. Butea frondosa (Downey-branched Butea) is a large tree called in India pullus, whence the name Plassy, the locality of the celebrated battle on June 23, 1757, which laid the foundation of the British Indian empire. It has large axillary and terminal racemes of deep-red downy flowers, which dye cotton cloth, previously impregnated with a solution of alum, or of alum and tartar, a fine yellow color. They are used also as a discutient to indolent tumors. The gum lac of commerce comes from the same tree.

*büte'-īng, pr. par. & s. [BUTE, v.]

A. As present participle: (See the verb.)

B. As substantive:

1. The act of dividing goods captured; the state of being so divided.

" . . . the hail richt that thay sall haue to the said prize, and buteing of gudis, . . ."—Balfour: Pract., p. 636.

2. The goods divided.

"Of all pillage, the capitane, the master, &c., gettis na part nor buteing, bot it sall be equallie dividit among the remanent of the companie marineris that mak watch, and gangis to the ruder."—Balfour: Pract., p. 640.

büte'-lang, s. [From O. Scotch bute=a butt, and lang=long, length.] The length or distance between one butt, used in archery, and another.

"As his maiestie wes within tua pair of butelangis to the towne of Perth, . . ."—Acts Ja. VI., 1600 (ed. 1814), p. 203.

*büte'-lěsse, *bote'-lěsse, a. [BOOTLESS.] (Morte Arthure, 981 & 1,014.)

*bu'-ten, prep. & adv. [A. S. būtan.] About.

"Those buten noe long swing he dreg."

Story of Gen. & Exod., 566.

bū-tēne, s. & a. [Eng. but (yin), and -ene, a termination used for hydrocarbons having the formula C_nH_{2n} .]

A. As substantive:

Chem.: An organic, diatomic, fatty radical, $C_4H_8^*$, called also Butylene, Quartene, and Tetrene. There are three modifications of it, having the formula C_4H_8 . Normal Butene, $CH_3-CH_2-CH=CH_2$; Pseudo-butene, $CH_3-CH=CH-CH_3$; Iso butene, $\begin{smallmatrix} H_3C \\ H_3C \end{smallmatrix} > C = CH_2$.

Normal-butene is produced by the chemical action of alcoholic potash upon primary-butyl-iodide ($CH_3-CH_2-CH_2-CH_2I$), or by the action of zinc ethide $Zn(C_2H_5)_2$ on brom-ethene ($CH_2=CHBr$). It is a gas at ordinary temperatures; at 10° it is condensed into a liquid.

Pseudo-butene is formed by the chemical action of alcoholic potash on a pseudo-butyl-iodide ($CH_3-CH_2-CHI-CH_3$). It boils at 3°. It can also be obtained by the decomposition of amyl alcohol at red heat.

Iso-butene is formed by the action of alcoholic potash and tertiary-butyl-iodide, or by the electrolysis of isovaleric acid. It boils at 6°. It is absorbed by strong H_2SO_4 ; on diluting with water and distilling, tertiary-butyl-alcohol is obtained, $C(CH_3)_3OH$. The di-bromides of the three isomeric butenes, $C_4H_8Br_2$, boil—normal at 160°, iso at 159°, and pseudo at 143°.

B. As adjective: (See the compound.)

butene glycols, s. pl. Chemical compounds, $C_4H_8(OH)_2$, called also butylene alcohols and quartene alcohols. They are diatomic alcohols. Six are theoretically possible. The following have been examined:

bōil, bōy; pōut, jōwl; cat, cell, chorus, chin, bench; go, gem; thin, this; sin, as; expect, Xenophon, exist. ph = f. -cian, -tian = shan. -tion, -sion = shūn; -tion, -sion = zhūn. -tious, -cious, -sious = shūs. -ble, -dle, &c. = bēl, dēl.

1. Normal Butene Glycol:

$\text{CH}_3=\text{CH}(\text{OH})-\text{CH}_2-\text{CH}_2(\text{OH})$. Formed by leaving a cold mixture of acetic aldehyde and dilute hydrochloric acid for a few days, when aldol, the aldehyde of butene glycol, is formed; this is treated with sodium amalgam. It is a thick liquid, boiling at 204° . By oxidizing with chromic acid mixture it is converted, first into crotonic aldehyde, then into acetic and oxalic acids.

2. Ethyl Glycol:

$\text{CH}_3-\text{CH}_2-\text{CH}(\text{OH})-\text{CH}_2(\text{OH})$, obtained from normal butene bromide by saponification with caustic potash. It is a viscid liquid, boiling at 192° . By rapid oxidation it is converted into oxalic acid, but by dilute nitric acid into glycollic and glyoxylic acids.

3. Isobutene Glycol: $\text{H}_3\text{C}-\text{C}(\text{OH})-\text{CH}_2(\text{OH})$, or dimethyl glycol. It is prepared by heating isobutene bromide for several days with potassium carbonate. It boils at 178° . Oxidized by potassium permanganate into carbonic and acetic acid.

bū-tē-ō, s. [Lat. buteo=a buzzard.]

Ornith.: A genus of raptorial birds, the typical one of the sub-family Buteoninae. The American turkey-buzzard, Cathartes aura, is the best known species of bird bearing the name of buzzard in this country but does not belong to this genus.

bū-tē-ō-nī-næ, s. pl. [From Lat. buteo=a buzzard, and f. pl. suff. -inæ.]

Ornith.: A sub-family of Falconidae, containing the Buzzards. It is placed near the Aquilinae (Eagles), and has a certain remote affinity to the Vulturidae (Vultures). [BUZZARD.]

but-er, s. [BITTERN.] (Scotch.)

buth, buthe, 1, 2, and 3 pers. pl. pr. indic. of v. [BEN.] Are.

"Ne buth here in this bour but our selue tweyne."

William of Palerne, 4,447.

"[&] if thay two ne buth noght bolde! aghen me to fighte on stoure."

Sir Ferumbras (ed. Herrtage), p. 4, l. 100.

buths-carle, s. pl. [A. S. būtse-carl=a sailor.]

O. Law: Mariners, seamen. (Selden: Mare Clausum, 184.) (Wharton.)

būt-lēr, būt-tel-ar, bu-tel-er, bot-tel-er, bot-il-er, bōt-ēl-ēr, bōt-lēr, s. [Fr. bouteiller; Norm. Fr. butuiller; Prov. boteillier; Sp. botillero; Ital. bottigliere; Low Lat. buticularius. From Fr. bouteille; Norm. Fr. butuille=a bottle.] [BOTTLE.]

*1. A cup-bearer.

"This buteler Ioseph sone for-gat."

Story of Gen. & Exod., 2,092.

Botiere (boteler, P.). Pincerna, promus, propinator, acalculis, Cath.—Prompt. Parv.

"... and thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler."—Gen. xl. 13.

2. An officer in the houses of monarchs, noblemen, and wealthy individuals generally, whose special function it is to take charge of the beer, wine, and other liquors, and also of the plate. As it would be injudicious to trust these to an inferior menial, the butler in many cases is the head servant in the house.

"This letter, notwithstanding the poor butler's manner of writing it . . ."—Spectator.

būt-lēr-age (age as īg), s. [Eng. butler, and suff. -age.] An ancient hereditary duty belonging to the crown. It was the right of taking two tuns of wine from every ship importing twenty tuns or more into England. This right, which is mentioned in the great roll of the Exchequer in 8 Richard I., was commuted under Edward I. for a duty of two shillings on every tun imported by merchant strangers. The proceeds were given to the king's butler, whence the name butlerage. It was called also prisage of wines. (Blackstone: Comment., bk. i. ch. 8.)

"These ordinary finances are casual or uncertain, as be the escheats, the customs, butlerage, and impost."—Bacon.

būt-lēr-ship, būt-tēl-lar-shýppe, s. [Eng. butler, and suff. -ship.] The office or functions of a butler.

"... and restored the chiefe buttelar vnto hys buttelarshýppe."—Bible (1551), Gen. xl.

"And he restored the chief butler unto his butlership again; and he gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand."—Gen. xl. 21.

būt-ment, s. [Contr. from Eng. abutment (q.v.).] Architecture:

1. The buttress of an arch; the supporter, i. e., the part which joins it to the upright pier. [ABUTMENT.]

2. The mass of stonework at the extremities of a bridge to give lateral support to its arches, or support to the ends of the beams if the bridge be a wooden one.

butment-cheek, s.

Carp.: The part of a mortised timber surrounding the mortise, and against which the shoulders of the tenon bear.

bū-tō-mā'-çě-æ, s. pl. [From Mod. Lat. butomus (q.v.), and fem. pl. suff. -aceæ.]

Bot.: Butomads, an order of plants placed by Dr. Lindley under his seventeenth or Alismal alliance. The sepals are three, generally herbaceous. The petals are three, colored, and petaloid, being generally purple or yellow. The flowers are in umbels. There are three, six, or more ovaries distinct, or united into a single mass. The seeds are numerous and minute. The leaves, which are very cellular, have parallel veins, and often a milky juice. The species are found in marshes in tropical America and in Europe. Dr. Lindley estimated their number at seven, in four genera.

bū-tūm-adş, s. pl. [From Mod. Lat. butomus (q.v.), and Eng. pl. suff. -ads.]

Bot.: Lindley's name for the order Butomaceæ (q.v.).

bū-tōm-ūs, s. [In Fr. butome; Sp. & Ital. butomo; Gr. boutomos; boutomon; from bous=an ox, and temnō=to cut. So called because the sharp leaves cut the mouths of oxen which feed upon them.]

Bot.: Flowering-rush, formerly called also Water-gladiolus, or Grassy-rush. A genus of plants, the typical one of the order Butomaceæ. It has nine stamens, a very unusual number, and six capsules. It is a highly ornamental plant, with the leaves, which are all radical, two or three feet long, and an umbel of many rose-colored flowers.

bütt (1), büt, s. & a. [Fr. bout; O. Fr. bot=an end.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ord. Lang.: The end, the furthest limit of anything.

II. Technically:

1. Tools, weapons, &c.:

(1) Gen.: The hinder, larger, or blunter end or an object; as of a gun, a connecting-rod, a crow-bar, &c.

(2) Spec.: The shoulder-end of a gun-stock covered with a heel-plate.

2. Tanning, &c.:

(1) The thick part of an ox-hide.

(2) Pl. (butts): Those parts of the tanned hides of horses which are under the crupper. (Jamieson.)

B. As adjective: (See the compound.)

butt-end, s. [BUT-END.]

bütt (2), s. in compos. [From butt (1), v. = to abut.] An abuttal.

¶ Butts and bounds: The abutments and boundaries of land. (Holloway.)

"But or bertel or bysselle (berselle, P.) Meta."—Prompt. Parv.

1. Joinery, &c.:

(1) The end of a connecting-rod against which the boxing is attached by the strap, cotter, and gib.

(2) The end of an object where it comes squarely against another.

(3) A joint where the ends of two objects come squarely together without scarfing or chamfering.

2. Shipbuilding: The meeting-joint of two planks in a strake. The joint between two strakes is a seam.

3. Door-hinges: A form of door-hinge which screws to the edge of a door, and butts against the casing, instead of extending out across the face of a door, like the strap-hinge. It consists of two oblong plates, one edge of each of which is dentated to fit its fellow, a pintle traversing each interlocking portion to form a joint. [BUTT-HINGE.]

4. Fire-engines: The standing portion of a half-coupling at the end of a hose.

butt-chain, s.

Saddlery: A short chain, two of which reach from the leather tugs to the single-tree, to each end of which they are hooked.

butt-hinge, but-hinge, s. A hinge formed of two plates and interlocking projecting pieces which are connected by a pintle.

butt-howel, s.

Coopering: A howeling-adze used by coopers.

butt-joint, s.

Carp.: A joint in which the pieces come square against each other, endwise. In ironwork the parts are welded, and the term is used in contradistinction to a lap-joint or weld.

butt-weld, s.

Forging: A weld in which the edges are square-butteted and jammed against each other, and then welded; a jump-weld.

bütt (3), s. & a. [From Fr. but=a butt, a mark, aim, a laughing-stock; butte=a hillock, a mark, a mound of earth, point, aim, goal, butt.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. A place or person aimed at.

(1) Lit.: A place on which a mark is placed to be shot at; a target. [II., 1.]

¶ Often in the plural, referring to a line of marks to be aimed at rather than a single one.

"But chief, beside the butts, there stand Bold Robin Hood and all his band."

Scott: Lady of the Lake, v. 22.

¶ A butt's length: The distance at which the butt is from the person aiming at it.

(2) Figuratively:

(a) A place which one aims at reaching.

"Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,

The very sea-mark of my utmost sail."

Shakesp.: Othello, v. 2.

(b) A person or persons viewed as an object for angry attack, or for ridicule.

"The papists were the most common-place, and the butt against whom all the arrows were directed."—Clarendon.

"Finds thee, at best, the butt to crack his joke on."

Pope: Satire, 1,740.

2. Ground appropriated for practising archery.

3. A piece of ground which in plowing does not form a proper ridge, but is excluded at an angle; a piece of land in any way disjoined from the rest.

"And that other rig or butt of land of the same land in the field called the Gallowbank, or the tail or south end thereof."—Act Chas. II. (ed. 1814), viii. 295.

¶ Hence a small piece of land is sometimes called the butts.

II. Technically:

Rifle and Artillery Practice:

1. A target.

2. A wooden structure consisting of several thicknesses of boards, separated by small intervals for the purpose of ascertaining the depth of penetration of bullets.

3. A frame of iron and wood, representing a large section of armor-plating, and moored in position for determining the destructive power of shot, shell, and given charges of powder.

4. A mound of earth to receive the bullets in the proof of gun-barrels.

B. As adj.: (See the compounds.)

butt-shaft, but-shaft, s. A kind of arrow, used for shooting at butts; formed without a barb, so as to stick into the butts, and yet be easily extracted. (Nares.)

"The very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft."—Shakesp.: Rom. & Jul., ii. 4.

"Cupid's butt-shaft is too hard for Hercules' club."—Shakesp.: Love's Labor Lost, i. 2.

A. Intrans.: To strike against with the forehead, as a ram or a bull does.

"For bigge Bulles of Basan brace hem about,
That with their hornes budden the more stoute."
Spenser: Shep. Cal., ix.

"He seeks the fight; and, idly butting, feigns
His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk."
Thomson: The Seasons; Spring.

B. Trans.: To strike with the forehead, as a ram; to drive. (Lit. & fig.)

"Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell:—the beast
With many heads butts me away."
Shakespeare: Coriolanus, iv. 1.

bütt (2), v. i. [Contracted from abut, v. (q. v.)]
To abut, to join at the extremity or at the side, to be as a boundary to.

"And Burnsdale then doth butt on Don's well-watered land."
Drayton.

büt-téd, pa. par. [But (1), v. t.]

büt-téd, a. [From but (2), v.]

büt-tër (1), *büt-tëre, *büt-tîre, *büt-türe, *büt-tÿr, *büt-ëre, *bot-ure, *bot-ere, *bot-yr, s. & a. [A. S. butere, butyre, butera; Fries. butere; Dut. boter; Ger. butter; Fr. beurre; Prov. buire, boder; Ital. burro; Lat. butyrum, butyron, buturium; Gr. boutyros=(1) butter, (2) a kind of salve; bous=an ox, bullock, or cow, and tyros=cheese.]

A. As substantive:

I. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit.:

(1) In the same sense as II. 1 (q. v.).

"Boture (botyr, x.). Butirum."—Prompt. Parv.

(2) The butter of Scripture: In most cases curdled or inspissated milk.

"And he took butter, and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them . . ."—Gen. xviii. 8.

2. Fig.: A substance resembling butter in consistency, or in any other obvious quality. [II. 2.]

II. Technically:
